COMMENT OF THE DAY

Situation In Malaya

GENERAL Temple's analysis of the situation in Malaya given at a London press conference this week was only partly reassuring. A degree of satisfaction can be derived from the knowledge that there has been a slow improvement in the results of the military campaign, but General Temple has himself emphasized, there is no room for complacency, nor is the end of the war in sight. The British High Commissioner returns to his job within the next few days and in due course there should be manifestations of the results of his conferences with Mr Churchill and Mr Lyttelton. It is known that General Temple had subjects other than military operations to discuss with the Prime Minister. One was the recent fall in prices for natural rubber which threatens to have serious effects on Malaya's economy; another, the extent to which the Malayan Government is endeavouring to give substance to the scheme for securing wholehearted Chinese co-operation in withstanding the intimidations of the terrorists. It is generally felt that insufficient success has attended this movement.

IT is a deplorable fact that the terrorists continue to retain the initiative. The successful ambush which they laid in the jungle on Thursday is illustrative. On the other hand the numerous surrenders and the heavy casualties suffered by the Communists must not be discounted. The military picture, taken in its broadest canvas, is more encouraging than disconcerting. It is on the other "fronts"—economic and political—where the greatest danger lies. Under no circumstances can the Malayan Government afford at this time to have the country further disturbed by an economic depression involving unemployment and reduced living standards. This would provide the Communists with much more deadly ammunition than bullets and grenades. Stabilising of the economic situation rates first priority, for if there is disintegration on this "front," political instability must follow.

Western Powers To Discuss Policy Towards Russia

IMPORTANT DECISIONS IMMINENT

London, June 20.

The imminent arrival in Britain of the United States Ambassador to Moscow, Mr George Kennan, foreshadowed important Western discussions next week on policy towards Russia when the American, British and French Foreign Ministers convene for a new round of diplomatic exchanges.

Mr Kennan, one of America's leading experts on Russian affairs, is expected to give his interpretation of Moscow's latest sensational shift of its diplomatic representation in London, Washington and Peking.

Differences in the Western camp over the most appropriate approach to Moscow's latest "advances" and the need for a joint up-to-date Western policy on Russia have made early top level Big Three talks advisable to determine the course of tactics towards the Kremlin in the months to come.

The West anticipates a great deal of "fireworks" to come from Moscow with the newly appointed Ambassador to London, Mr Andrei Gromyko, as the chief engineer of the anticipated new Soviet "peace" campaign.

There is also growing anticipation of a Big Four meeting on a medium level some time later this year which the Foreign Ministers will want to clear the ground in their meeting here next week.

A review of policy toward Russia will be parallelled by a Big Three Western discussion of the Korean and Far Eastern scene where the differences have been more marked in the past few months.

The Franco-American talks in Washington earlier this week on Indo-China and the current exchanges between the Australian Prime Minister, Mr R. G. Menzies, with the United States Secretary of State, Mr Dean Acheson, on the need of a more co-ordinated Pacific defence have been preparing the ground for these negotiations.

Discussions on Korea between the British Defence Minister, Earl Alexander, and top American military and political leaders have also helped to clear the ground.

While Britain's fears over the latest developments in Korea have been slightly relieved following Lord Alexander's tour of the area, there will be further pressure for a speed-up of the armistice negotiations and against precipitating a situation which might involve the United Nations in an all-out war with China.

At the same time, the London exchanges are expected to seek co-ordination of Allied Far Eastern policies to tie in separate theatres of military operations, including Indo-China and Malaya, and to determine what action is to be taken in the event of a final breakdown of the Panmunjom armistice talks.

Political and military advisers have been urging that such a joint plan should be available in the event of an emergency which would allow immediate action if necessary. The presence here next week of the United Nations Secretary General, Mr Trygve Lie, might afford an opportunity for informal talks on possible new United Nations moves.

Mr Lie is scheduled to make a public address on the second anniversary of the Korea war in which a pronouncement on the situation is anticipated.

THREE BRIEFS

The Western Foreign Ministers will discuss at their disposal three briefs on the situation in the Middle East.

One of these will be from the United States Assistant Secretary for the Middle East, Mr Henry Byrnes, on his recent tour of the area, another will be from the British Foreign Office based on the current meeting of British envoys to Middle Eastern countries and the Chiefs of Staff, and the third will be from the French Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, M. Maurice Schumann, on his meeting this week in Istanbul with French diplomats in the Middle East.

All these reports are understood to urge for speed in arrangements for the defence of this strategically vital oil-rich area but the method of approach differs considerably.

France's preoccupation is with North Africa, with Syria, Egypt and the Sudan while the United States visualises the area as a whole.

The continued existence of these differences are dashes hopes once again that the Foreign Ministers will be able to resolve them at their forthcoming meeting and come to a final agreement at this time.

These trends emerged after a week rich in political developments in the international scene including:

1.—The shooting down of a Swedish Catalina flying boat by the Russians.

2.—The disclosure of an organised Soviet spy ring in Sweden.

3.—The cleaning up of the Kojé prisoner camp in Korea.

4.—The announcement by Britain's High Commissioner in Malaya, Sir Gerald Temple, of a marked decline of terrorist activity in Malaya.

5.—The appointment of the Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr Andrei Gromyko, as Ambassador to London.

6.—The detaining at Aden of a disputed cargo of 1,000 tons of Iranian oil aboard the tanker Rosa Mary.—United Press.

More Violence In S. Africa

Johannesburg, June 20. Several people were injured today as violence flared up again in the gold mining centre of Odendaalsburg when the police sought to arrest those responsible for last Wednesday's bloody riots.

The police clashed with several hundred stone-throwing Africans mostly women, and the encounter soon deteriorated into a hand-to-hand fight causing several people to be injured on both sides before the demonstrators were dispersed by tear gas.

Meanwhile, many of the African workers at the adjoining mines were on strike following recent incidents with the authorities. —France Press.

Italy Expels Pravda Correspondent

Rome, June 20.

The Italian Government tonight expelled from Italy the correspondent of the Moscow newspaper Pravda, Madame Olga Tchetchetkina.

The Foreign Minister, Count Carlo Sforza, told the Russian correspondent that she was "no longer welcome in Italy."

It was learned that the Italian Government regarded several recent articles written by her as "offensive to the Italian Government, to the head of the State and to the national dignity."

She was given one week in which to leave the country.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Madame Tchetchetkina had given a "violently distorted" view of events in Italy. He said these distortions reached a culminating point during the visit here earlier this week of the Atlantic Pact commander, General Ridgway.

The spokesman asserted that Madame Tchetchetkina even distorted the speeches of Italian Communist leader Palmiro Togliatti. He cited an instance of a speech last November, in which, according to Madame Tchetchetkina, Togliatti said that Russia was the only country in the world which offered all the freedoms. The spokesman said Signor Togliatti had not even claimed this himself in the speech.

Madame Tchetchetkina first came to Italy about a year ago. Shortly after her arrival she started making public speeches which gave rise to a Foreign Office protest. She travelled extensively about the country, frequently visiting Bologna, the "Communist bastion" of Italy's industrial north.—Reuter.

Beauties Visit UN Council

United Nations, June 20.

Fifteen international beauties today visited the United Nations and caused some commotion in the Security Council.

Wearing the sashes of their respective countries, aspirants to the title of "Miss Universe" were brought into the Council during the debate on the Geneva Protocol prohibiting the use of germ and chemical warfare.

After the meeting, the contestants lunched with delegates from their respective countries. The "Miss Universe" pageant is to be held at Long Beach, California, on June 23.—Reuter.

FOUR INCIDENTS IN TUNISIA

Tunis, June 20.

A total of four incidents were reported here from various parts of Tunisia during the past 24 hours. They included the shooting of two Tunisians, the explosion of a bomb in the villa of the Sousse College Professor of Philosophy.

A total of 43 people were arrested by the police in Tunis and several more in Sousse as a result of the incidents.—France Press.

The night staff of 100 and a Soviet Military guard of 20 refused to leave. The radio house (in background) was surrounded by barbed wire.—London Express.

When Stalin Was Glad To Hear Britain Had Poison Gas Bombs

United Nations, June 20.

Britain today disclosed that Russia had agreed to a proposal that Britain should use poison gas during the last war if the Germans used it first.

Sir Gladwyn Jebb, Britain's delegate, told the Security Council during a debate on the use of chemical and bacterial weapons in warfare that Marshal Stalin had given his wholehearted assent when the British Government informed the Soviet Union during the last war that it was prepared to use poison gas.

Sir Gladwyn read the text of messages exchanged during the war between Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin, in which Churchill informed Stalin that Britain had "immense stores" of gas bombs which it was prepared to use against Hitler's armies the moment the Nazis used gas themselves.

Premier Stalin replied that he was "only too glad" to hear that Britain was prepared to use gas if the Germans used this weapon against Russia.

Sir Gladwyn said that today the Soviet Government was attempting to suggest that the use of chemical and bacterial warfare was a "crime."

He added, ironically: "Surely not even the Russians can have it both ways."

The Council met to resume the debate on a Soviet resolution calling for general ratification of the Geneva Protocol of 1925, which bans the use of bacterial and chemical weapons.

The debate was adjourned last Wednesday in an atmosphere of some heat after the American delegate had accused the Communists of conducting a "campaign of lies" concerning alleged germ warfare in Korea.

LETTERS QUOTED

Sir Gladwyn Jebb said the Soviet Union had "exaggerated" the value of the Geneva Protocol governing the use of chemical and bacterial warfare during the last 25 years.

He added: "As evidence of the value or lack of value which Soviet leaders attached to the Protocol during the war I might refer to an exchange of letters between Mr Churchill and Premier Stalin."

"In a letter of March 20, 1942, Mr Churchill said: 'Ambassador Malysky lunched with me last week and mentioned some evidence that the Germans may use gas upon you in their attempted spring offensive. After consulting my colleagues and Chiefs of Staff, I wish to assure you that His Majesty's Government will treat any use of this weapon of poison gas against Russian exactly as if it was directed against ourselves.'"

"I have been building up an immense store of gas bombs for discharge from aircraft and we shall not hesitate to use these over all suitable objectives in Western Germany from the moment that your armies and people are assailed in this way."

GRATEFUL

"In his reply of March 30, Premier Stalin said: 'I wish to express to you the Soviet Government's gratitude for the assurance that the British Government will look upon any use by the Germans of poison gas against the USSR in the same light as if this weapon had been used against Great Britain, and that the British Air Force will immediately use against suitable objectives in Germany large stocks of gas bombs held in England.'"

Sir Gladwyn Jebb went on: "Premier Stalin did not suggest that it was at that time a crime for us to possess a large stock of gas bombs. Yet I need scarcely say that these bombs had not been developed purely

"PRINCESS" FAILS IN LIBEL ACTION

London, June 20.

Olga Natalie Franciszka Lubranska von Dembinska, who claims to be known as a Polish Princess, today lost her action for alleged libel against the British Broadcasting Corporation and a London daily newspaper.

Judgment with costs was given against her in the High Court here.

She had complained of a radio newscast script broadcast in September 1950 entitled "Round-up of Subversive Foreigners", and an article in the Daily Mirror, headed "A Princess is held in purge of Reds."

The broadcast and the newspaper story both reported that a Polish Princess was amongst people arrested in France in a roundup of subversive foreigners. Olga von Dembinska contended that her friends who heard or read the reports had taken them as referring to her.

JURY'S DECISION

The jury decided that "credible and reasonable" people who knew the plaintiff, hearing the broadcast, would not hear it as referring to her.

They also decided that the words were defamatory applied to the Polish Princess mentioned in the reports, but estimated damages at only one farthing—the smallest British coin.

Dismissing the action with costs, Mr Justice Hilbery said the view of the jury, by these contemptuous damages, is sufficient to indicate that they think the action was frivolous and ought not to have been brought.

The judge said it was clear the plaintiff had used the title "Princess" for the last 25 years. But she was not a Poles, she was an English subject and her progenitors had been English for more than a generation.—Reuter.

Jammed Shell Explodes

Malta, June 20.

A jammed shell in a gun aboard the British warship Daring, which exploded and killed two of the crew, passed through the wardroom of the destroyer, it was disclosed tonight.

The wardroom was empty. The Daring, first of Britain's atom age destroyers, was on exercises in the Mediterranean when the accident occurred yesterday evening. It reached Malta today for repairs.

Senior commissioned gunner Gordon Willis Rossiter and ordnance artificer, 2nd class, William Patrick Murphy, who were both killed, were trying to clear the jammed shell from the Bofors gun by forcing it back through the breech with a rod.—Reuter.

MISS NEFF ARRIVES THE MARLENE WAY

Hildegard Neff, Hollywood's first German star since Marlene Dietrich, flew into London last week for a five-day visit.

In 18 months Miss Neff—tall, ash-blond, slim, and 25—has been given the full Hollywood treatment and the top Hollywood stars to play opposite her.

Her leading men include Tyrone Power, Gregory Peck, and Gary Merrill. Said Miss Neff: "I'm only really relaxed when I'm working, so for the past 18 months life has been relatively simple. I only do things which I like to do simple things like pack a case or buy clothes."

Miss Neff turned up in a white linen skirt and black silk jersey top. Said she: "I bought them in seven minutes. I don't waste time on clothes."

How did it all start for her? "I went to Hollywood first nearly four years ago under contract to a producer who was unproductive. I sat around getting a sunburn but nothing else."

"I went back to Germany to make a film there—and then, of course, I was wanted immediately by another Hollywood company."

She made "Decision Before Dawn" in Germany for an American company, and was promptly discovered for a second time.

HILDEGARDE NEFF... From Germany for the full Hollywood treatment.

In America now her closest friend is Marlene Dietrich—although the plan is not to build only one Marlene. I wouldn't even try to follow her."

Says Miss Neff: "There is only one Marlene. I wouldn't even try to follow her."

Mary Pickford Slips A Place In The Queue

By HAROLD CONWAY

London. She has been waiting for the date since last November—and eight months can seem a long time when you have once been the world's best-known actress and are planning a come-back.

But there have been no cameras trained on Mary Pickford this week, the stately re-entrance to the studios by Hollywood's First Lady is postponed until September at least. Mr. Kramer has asked her to go on waiting, while he gives preference to a picture starring coloured Broadway actress Ethel Waters.

This week Miss Pickford was to start acting again, for the first time in 20 years—as a small-town librarian who puts her customers' lives to rights.

This is an adaptation of a play, to be filmed with the original cast—and Miss Waters.

More than enough to buy up producer Kramer's entire company, I imagine, if the coming-back star grew tired of waiting.

For myself, I would rather wait. Gloria Swanson's spectacular emergence from the shadows had probably spurred Miss Pickford to action—it certainly cannot be the money.

But the heroine of Sunnybrook Farm never dealt in Swanson-style histrionics. Those of us who remember know that we collectively loved her; whether what she did was good acting is a detail quite forgotten as the Pickford legend grew.

It would be such a pity if that legend, unlike the hair and the fortune, proved not to be golden after all.

An Indian In The Red Army

New Delhi.
RUSSIA runs a school for spies in Prague. Its headquarters are above a bookshop—the biggest in the Czech capital—looking out on to Vyacheslavsky Avenue in the centre of the city. Most of the students are Asians, groomed to foment Communist rebellions in their homelands. Other nationalities receive their training at special camps between Prague and the Austrian border.

This is revealed by mild-mannered Dr Satyanarain Sinha, a former captain in the Red Army and now a Congress member of the Indian Parliament.

His biting attack on the noisy Communist minority in the Assembly recently caused a national sensation, and his accusations of direct Moscow interference in the affairs of India and other democracies provoked howls of fury from the harried Left.

Few Admitted

THE small, bespectacled doctor told me the full story in the cool foyer of the red sandstone Parliament building in New Delhi.

Calmly he described his first-hand experience of the Communist build-up during 22 years in Europe as student, journalist, diplomat and saboteur.

There is a Communist "preparatory school" in

Dr Satyanarain Sinha, now a member of the Indian Parliament, reveals how the Russians train spies and saboteurs

FROM IAN DUNBAR

Leipzig, he explained. There, Gerhard Eisler, East Germany's Communist propaganda boss, heads the Cominform's propaganda department.

Students of all nationalities are put through an intensive indoctrination course in a wing of the Russian-controlled Leipzig radio station.

Expert instructors explain the techniques of rumour and insinuation, of pamphleteering, and of pavement oratory. Supervisors check progress and watch for likely pupils who are selected to pass through the far more important "college" in Prague.

The sabotage course is extremely difficult. Few are admitted; fewer pass.

Students begin with military training with Red Army units, and go on to the gruelling guerrilla warfare school. They later learn how to capture weapons and arm rebellious populations; how to mine communications and attack police and troop garrisons. Particular attention is paid to sabotage machinery. This does not cause as much damage as an armed revolt and yet often passes undetected.

"Students are warned from the moment they start the course that their future is subordinate to the interests of the Soviet Union," said Dr Sinha. "There is nothing secret about that; it has been Communist policy since the Sixth Congress of the Comintern in 1928."

That was the year before Dr Sinha, penniless and illiterate, stowed away on a British ship bound for Europe. He was put ashore at Naples—"the captain proved most kind"—and there met the Russian author, Maxim Gorki, who was living in retirement at Capri.

Gorki recognised a useful convert to Communism and sent the young man to study in Berlin, where the Reds ran a "bureau to battle with imperialism."

Sinha wandered about Europe, working to pay for his college fees and tuition, but was not thought fit for admission to Russia even with Gorki's backing until 1932.

He entered with a passport and under an assumed name. The Russians gave him an enthusiastic welcome. They sent him to the "Communist University for Workers from the East."

Tough Training

AFTER six months he was sent to an infantry unit of the Russian army to learn liberation tactics. Training was tough.

Recruits were worked all day and called out at midnight to march 50 miles across snow-covered fields.

But Sinha made the grade, and was rapidly promoted to captain. The Soviet authorities were short of interpreters, however, and sent him shortly afterwards to act as liaison officer with German engineers constructing the Dniepropetrovsk dam.

"I objected to being ordered about," said Sinha. "I was already beginning to see through the Communists. I had never become a party member, although I had been deluded into thinking there was some good in their ideas."

"The poverty and oppression in Russia convinced me they were more tyrannical than the capitalist regimes they professed to oppose."

He tried to leave Russia, but without success. The Russians said: "You came in without a passport. We cannot let you out."

He eventually managed to get away by alleging he would join in subversive activities in Europe.

He returned home in time to be arrested for opposition to the British in the 1942 Quit India campaign.

No Illusions

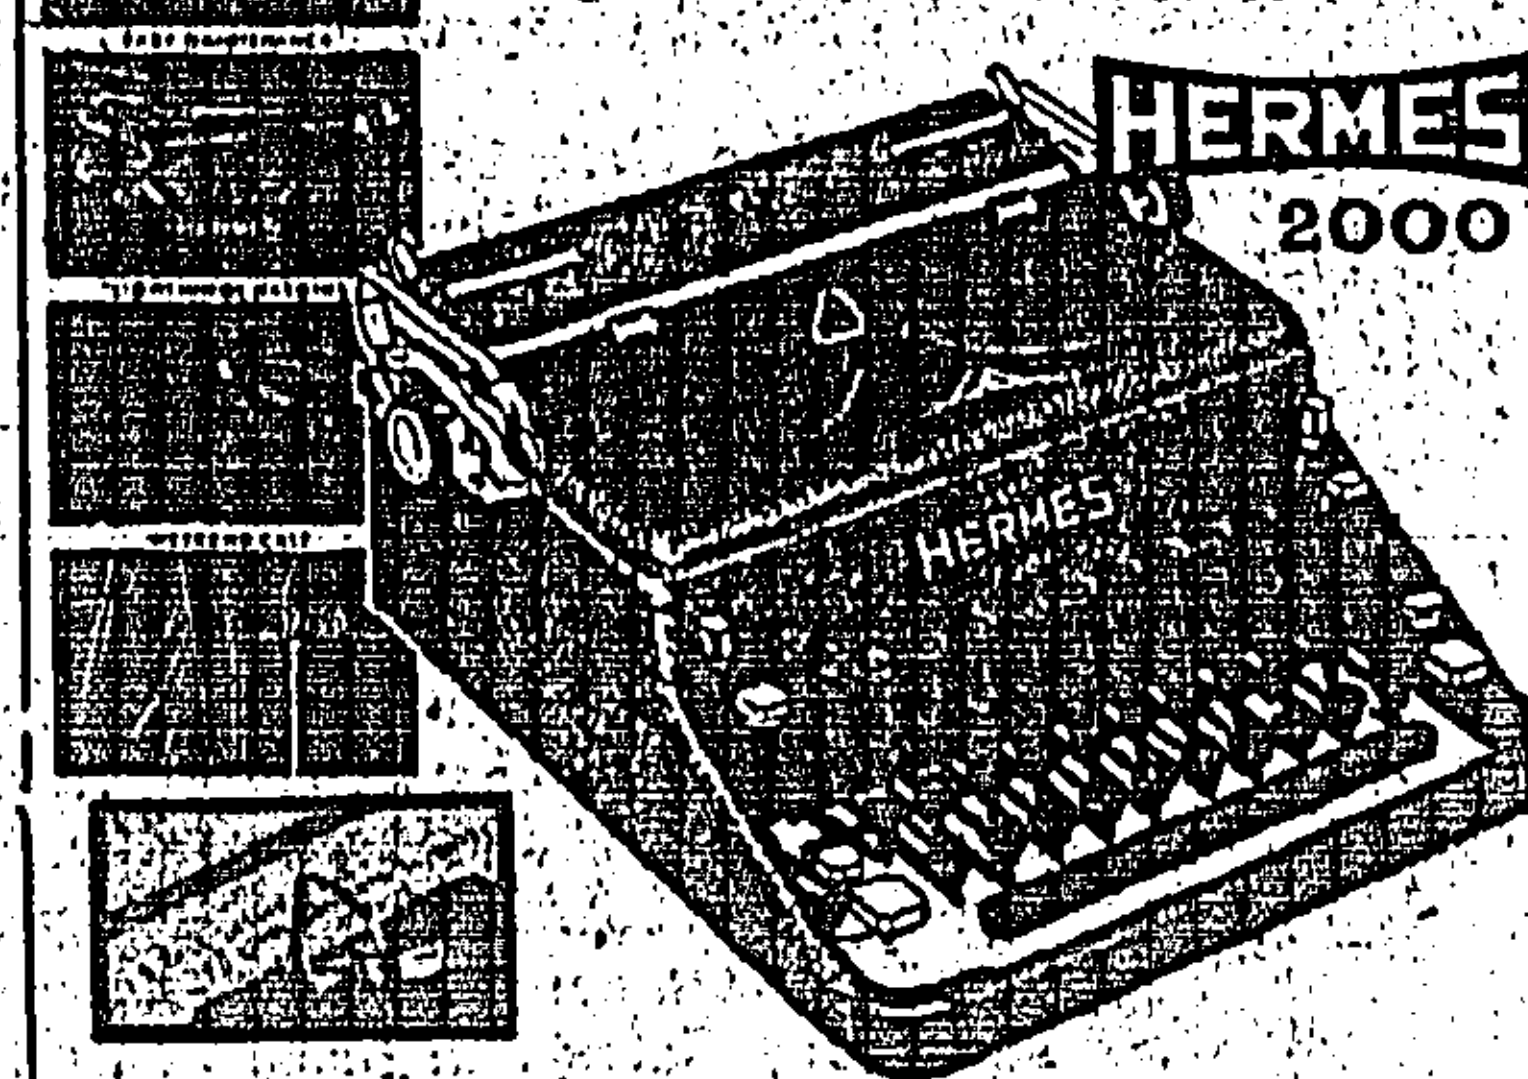

DR Sinha went back to an entirely new Europe after the war. Many of his old Communist classmates held leading posts behind the Iron Curtain—"and I had no illusions from the start what their policies would be."

He travelled widely through Eastern Europe, became first secretary of the Indian Legation at Bern.

"I made it my job to study this world in its first hand," he said. "I was particularly interested, naturally, in Communist activity in India. The facts I have stated I have verified personally."

It lay four years in snow and ice...

...yet the watch
still went!

Such was the fantastic adventure of a tiny CYMA lady's watch lost on the mountains of Norway in 1944. Scorching sun blazed down on it, a torrential rain and terrible storms swept over it. In winter it was buried in deep snowdrifts until the spring thaws uncovered it again.

Four long years it lay neglected and forgotten... then the little waterproof CYMA watch was found in a bubbling mountain stream. It was dried, wound up—AND STARTED GOING! Not only going but working accurately and normally, none the worse for its amazing ordeal!

What greater proof could there be of the remarkable reliability of a CYMA watch? The resulting masterpiece of years of careful work and research by thousands of specialists in one of the world's greatest watch factories.

BUCKY'S SAD DEMISE WAS IN GANGLAND TRADITION

From NEWELL ROGERS

New York.
FOR New York's gangland the death of 38-year-old Ralph (Bucky) Emmino, jewel thief and small-time "hood," was a classical murder.

The gangsters probably would say "a classy murder," for, as tradition demands, death came to Bucky in Brooklyn. And what is even more classical, in the Bath Beach district.

Bath Beach is famous for being the underworld's "morgue."

It was a dark Lovers Lane tradition again. There were the traditional dead-marks of Ure made when the death car arrived to take Bucky face downwards into the woody gutter. There were the ritual two bullets for the head and two for the chest.

As tradition—and prudence—demand, the neighbourhood householders heard not a sound. And there was the traditional anonymous telephone tip that sent police to the Lovers Lane.

There are two police theories for Bucky's slaying:

Theory 1: Not in the underworld tradition, so not too popular. Recently, Bucky stole into Brooklyn's shrine of the Virgin of Peace, sawed through a bronze grill and stole diamond-studded crowns of the painted Virgin and Child worth $35,000.

The shrine was built in the slum by the plot of 12,000 Brooklyn Italian-Americans. Women and priests went at the mourning services the following day. The crowds, blessed by the Pope, had been in the shrine only a week.

Was the murderer a religious fanatic?

Theory 2: More traditional. Bucky owed Bath Beach bookies money, much money. He welshed on bets. An unfavorable underworld offence.

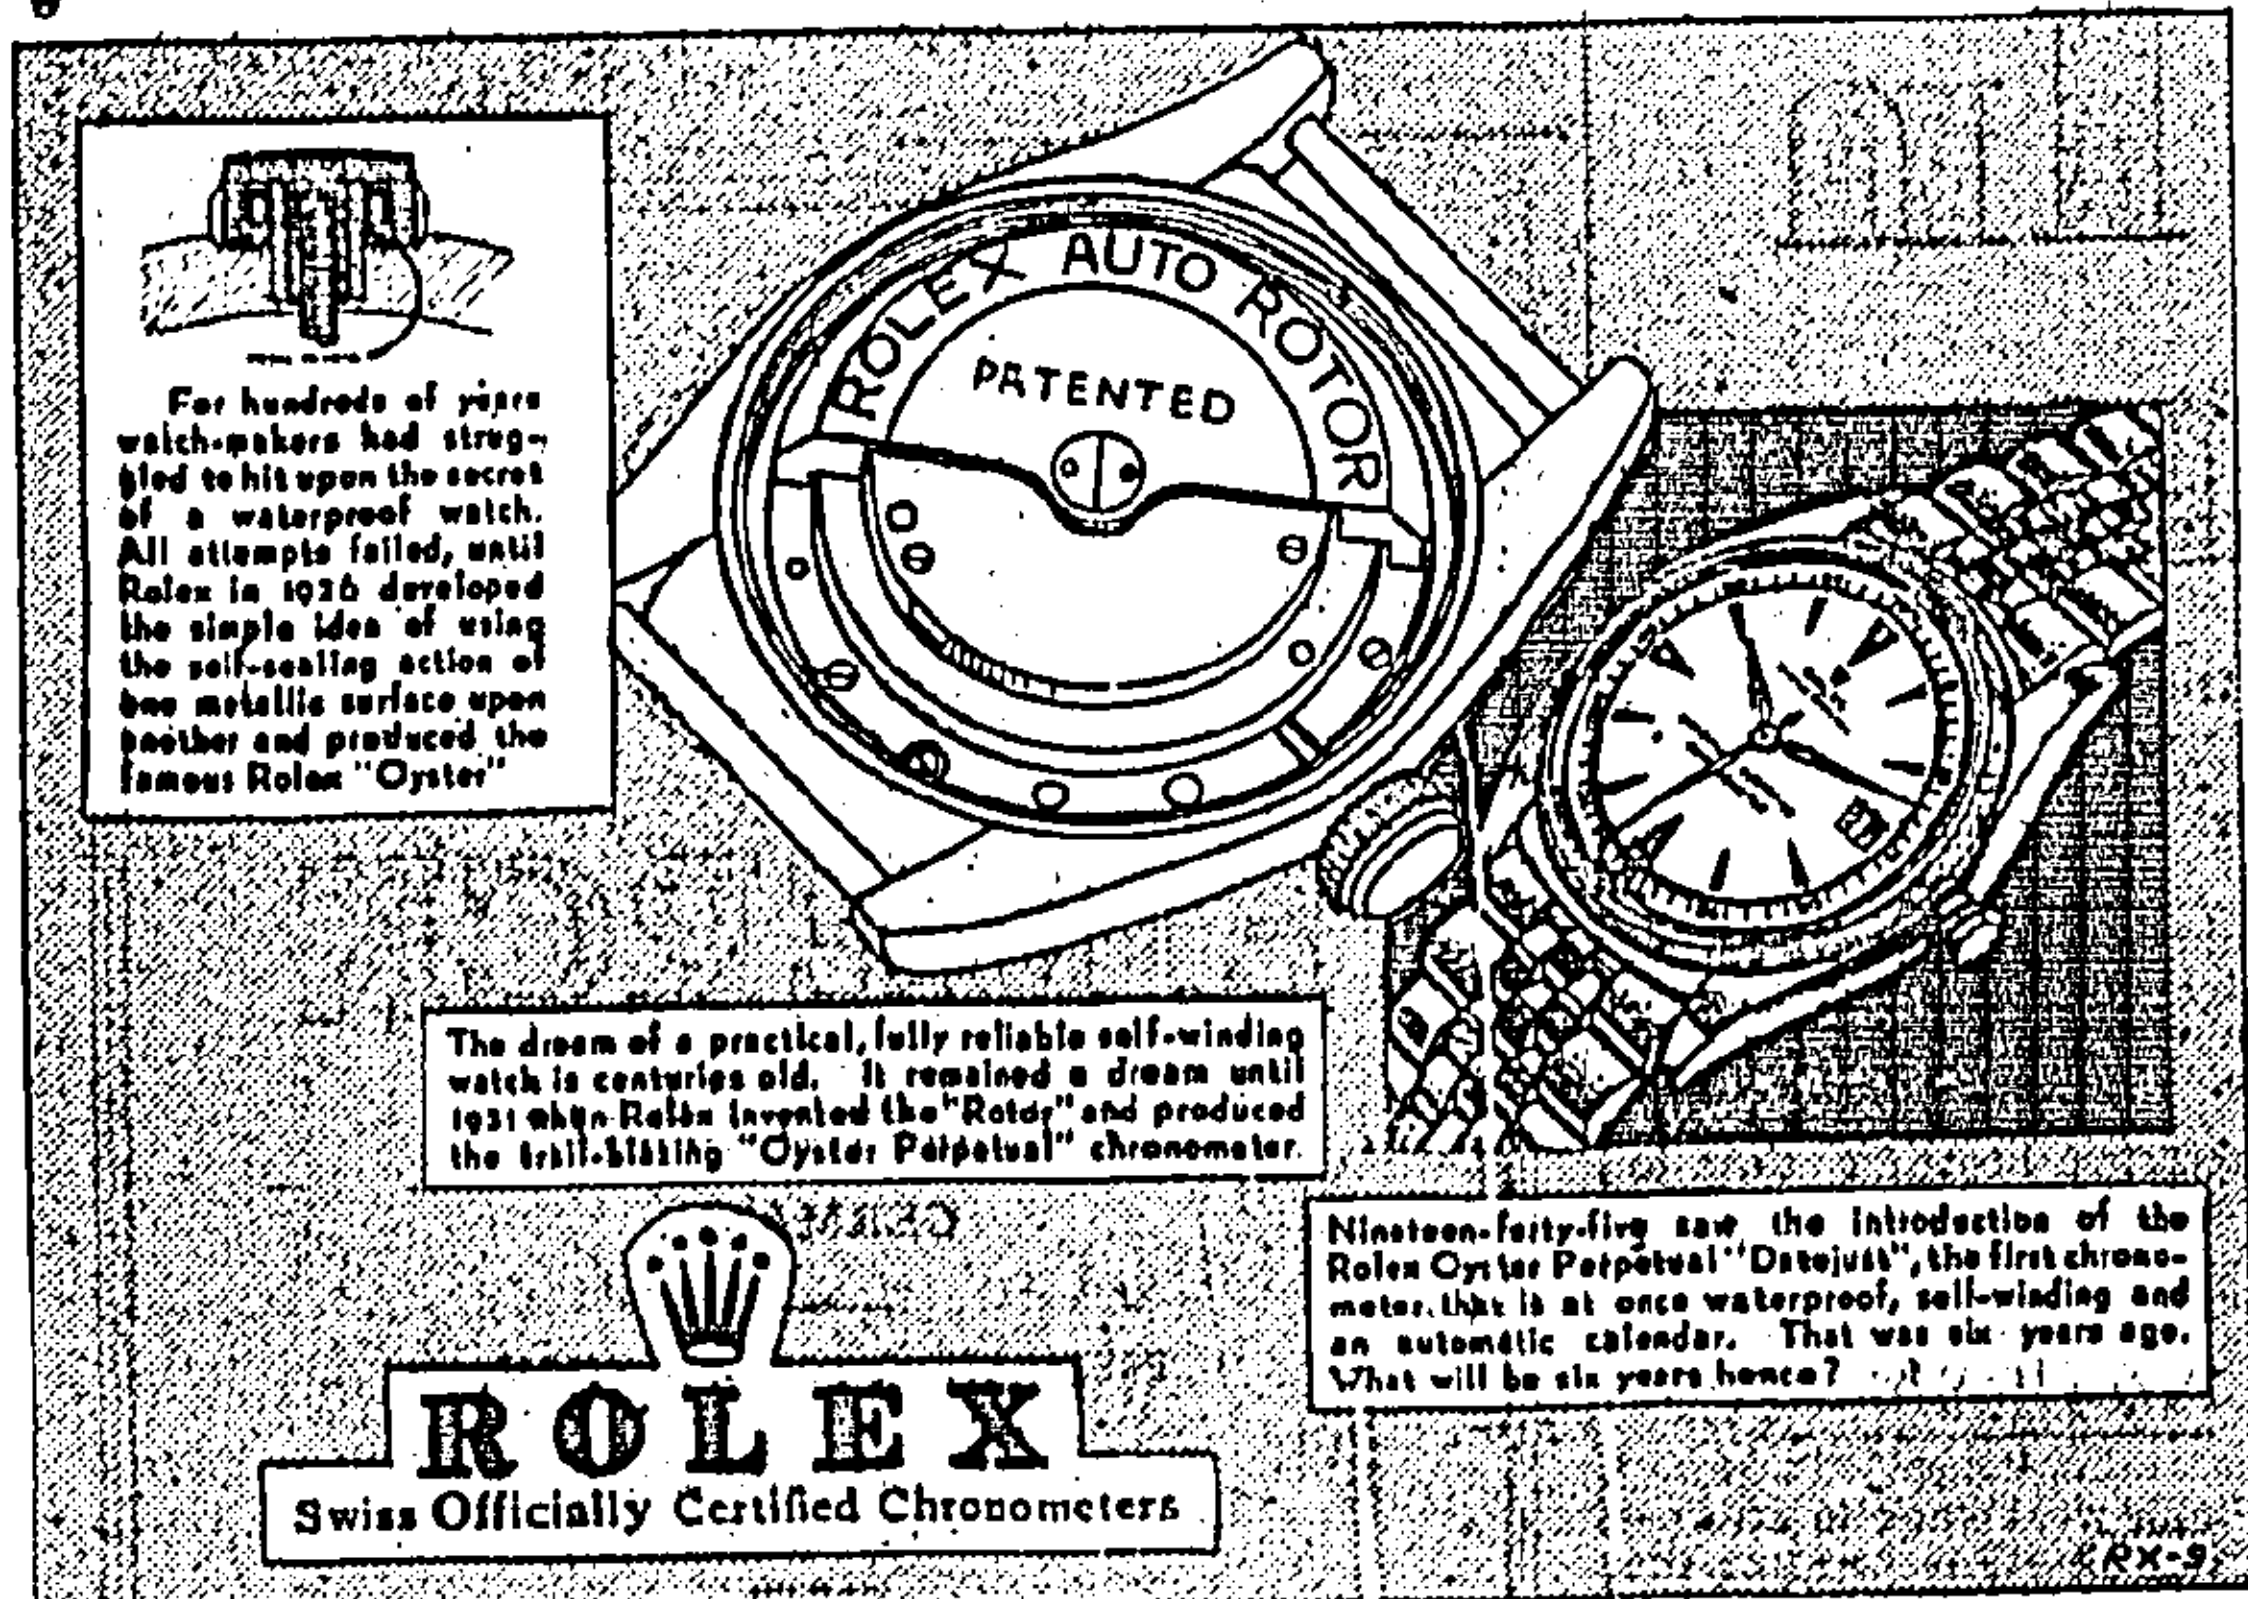

Was the murderer a paid killer?

His brothers, Carmine and Salvatore, are doing time right now for robbery. So police look brother Vincent to the Lovers Lane. He tried to throw himself on Bucky's body. Four cops struggled with him. Then he raised his right hand—and shooked: "I swear on the body of my brother that I'll get in the tradition, too."

FIVE HUNDRED YEARS PROGRESS IN FIFTY!

- The Rolex factory was the first to manufacture exclusively wrist-watches with LEVER escapement in series.
- It was the first to develop a truly WATERPROOF wrist-watch — now famous as the Rolex "Oyster".
- It was the first to perfect a waterproof and SELF-WINDING chronometer — the Rolex "Oyster Perpetual".
- It was the first to propound, the foremost to pursue, the policy of having the whole of their chronometer production OFFICIALLY certified by the Swiss Government Testing Stations — and today Rolex can boast of no less than 175 000 Official Timing Certificates issued by an impartial and stringent authority.

Now it's MURDER by hypnosis

by PERCY HOSKINS,

YOU might well take them in their dark suits, white collars, and sober ties for a gathering of top level civil servants or business executives. They are, in a sense, civil servants; they are, in a sense, business men. For they are the unpublished servants and protectors of the public, and they are in the business of making sure that crime does not pay.

New angles, new problems will face this year's meeting — it opened in Stockholm last week — of the International Criminal Police Commission, known in cables as Interpol.

One hundred and fifty police commissioners, heads of detective bureaus and secret service chiefs from 43 countries are pondering the toughening menace of the crook.

They will hear about the military-style organisation of the international gangs; about the surge in the dope-running "trade"; about a new method of murder by hypnosis.

And they will discuss how to protect the distinguished people from abroad who will be in London next year for the Coronation.

The Coronation will not be just a formal item on the agenda. The police chiefs recognise that such an occasion might well be used to create an international "incident."

Bank raid

HOST to the police chiefs will be Sweden's Professor Harry Soderman, "great" police scientist in the world.

He has news of a bank raid: almost the exact counterpart of the recent £280,000 mailbag robbery in London.

One of the gang, disguised as a "barrow boy," took up position near the kerb outside the bank just before an armoured car containing cash was due to arrive.

As one guard alighted from the car, the peddler pushed his barrow past the open door and pulled out a sub-machine gun from underneath layers of vegetables.

He covered the chauffeur and the second guard while his accomplices emerged from hiding to tackle the man who had alighted.

Fake suicide

AND so to murder — by hypnosis. Professor Soderman was called in to investigate a smuggling conspiracy. One of the gang, thought by the rest to have "squealed," was found dead.

It looked, and was meant to look, like suicide through remorse.

In fact, Professor Soderman discovered that the squealer had been hypnotised, and, told to stand on a chair. Then a noose was placed round his neck and the hypnotist told him to "start walking."

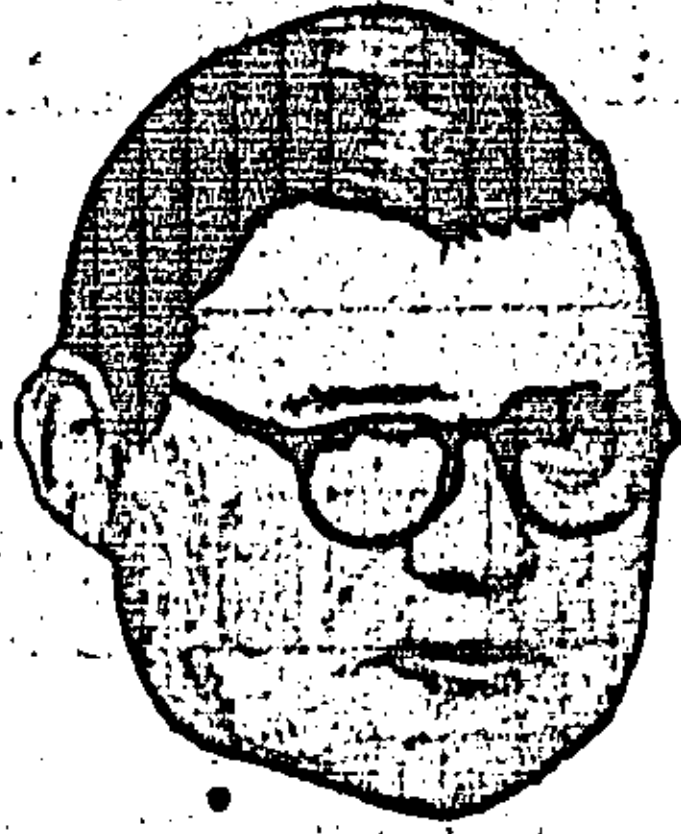

He did. The case from the Soderman dossier illustrates how a camera disproved another fake suicide.

A girl was found dead on a bench in a Vienna park. She had apparently shot herself through the head with a pistol which was lying near.

The scene was immediately photographed in the early morning before sunrise. Later, after developing the plate, the police photographer discovered signs that someone had been sitting close to the woman. This was revealed by faint marks in the dew which had collected on the bench. So murder was proved.

While Dr Soderman thinks that science is winning the fight against crime, he also admits that the criminal is becoming more daring and more skilful. And the present high rates of taxation and attempts at evasion have introduced a new factor into crime detection.

Police chiefs of the world will hear this man's crime secrets

In one recent case a man reported that he had been robbed of £3,000 and some valuable jewellery. The thief was arrested with £30,000 in his possession. Yet the victim refused to admit he had lost the other £27,000.

The professor's audience — which includes Sir Harold Scott, London's Commissioner of Police, and Mr. Ronald Howe, head of the C.I.D. — is the shrewdest and the most critical he has yet had to face.

The Crybaby Who "Sends" Them

Hollywood.

CROONER Johnny Alvin Ray who has deflected Frank Sinatra and Rudy Vallee as "Prince of Walls and Nabob of Sob," has married a freckled, snub-nosed California beauty.

Without a single note of music, he took as his bride blue-eyed, 22-year-old Marilyn Morrison in a civil ceremony in a suite at the Hotel Warwick.

It broke the hearts of millions of 'bobby-soxers. Even though the skies wept one of the worst rainstorms of the Spring, scores of the teenage sisterhood besieged the hotel to see their hero, and it possible got a look of his hair.

Twenty-five-year-old Johnny, half-deaf, self-taught son of an Oregon millwright, is to the bobby-soxers of 1952 what Vallee was to their mothers, and what Sinatra was to their older sisters.

To get to the top, this crumbler has become the national crybaby, an hysterical, hair-pulling crybaby.

Six months ago he was an obscure £25-a-week saloon piano player plus singer.

Then he made a record of a song called "Cry." It went wailing and keening out over the radio waves. Already two million records of this one song have been sold.

Before his marriage Ray said: "When I marry, I won't be to a girl in show business. That would be like a truck driver taking his wife along to change the oil."

So instead he married the daughter of a man in show business. Blue-eyed, five-foot, 22-year-old Marilyn Morrison, who wears her black hair in a poodle cut, is the daughter of Charles Morrison. He owns the Mosambo, Hollywood nightclub.

Johnny's rise has been as a nightclub singer.

In October he's booked to sing at Ciro's rival night spot to his father-in-law's "push joint."

All America is divided over the shrieks and wails and groans that come out of Johnny's mouth, the tears that cascade out of his eyes when he sings "The Little White Cloud," "Whisper and Glee" or "Tell the Lady I said Goodbye." Johnny's detractors and there are thousands of them, mostly male, say that just because he's half deaf and he can't hear himself that his singing is so horrible.

But the women who riot with divided "They worship him." Said Ava Gardner, after hearing Johnny at the Copacabana: "He sends me."

Asked Ava's husband, who "sends" quite a few girls in his age with his own crooning, drily: "In what direction?"

Ava's husband, you remember, is Frankie Sinatra. Express News Service.

WICKSTEED
ISLES

taken an Isle
for the Queen

FOR this week's island adventure the Intrepid buccaneer Wicksteed has been raising the Union Jack under the nose of the French.

"And gentlemen in England now abed shall think themselves accused that were not here" (Shakespeare). "God for Harry! England! And St George!" (more Shakespeare). I dare say you have not even heard of Les Eerchos, the scene of this stirring event. I hadn't myself till the other day, but now I have practically annexed the place in the name of the Queen.

Les Eerchos are about half a dozen rocks, midway between Jersey and France. At high tide they do not amount to much more than an acre of dry land between the tide, but for all that they are the subject of a whole Empire and a case that is now before the International Court at The Hague.

We descendants of Drake and Nelson and Harry V say the rocks belong to us, but the scheming French refuse to admit our claim.

That was the situation when the Great Wicksteed Expedition of Liberation set out from Jersey in a motor-boat.

'WE'LL FREE IT'

QUOTH Wicksteed, standing on the prow as the rocks of Eerchos have in sight. "A plague on The Hague. Here's one bit of the Empire we will free for our readers."

Peter, the master of the motor-boat, and his mate Bill shouted "Hooray!" and a lot of dirty black seabirds that were nesting on a whitened ledge flew off in alarm.

A school of porpoises fled for France, the shores of which were so near you could see the enemy's bathing huts.

Nobody but the seagulls and a few Robinson Crusoe rabbits live on Eerchos. There's only one patch of grass and that not much larger than a tennis court.

In winter the gales send their spray clean over everything. Yet on two of the rocks there are fair-sized summerhouses, and on another are 17 huts clustered together like concrete barnacles in the space of a quarter of an acre.

They belong to Jersey fishermen and week-enders who come here to escape from the crowds on the main island.

Peter owns one of them. He can go to sleep in the sun beside it and fish at the same time. All he has to do is tie the line round his toe so that the fish wake him up when they are caught.

UNOPPOSED

HOW can any red-blooded Briton stand by and see such enterprise checked by the machinations of the French?

Other subjects of the Queen are directly concerned in the sovereignty of these rocks. One of them is a bronzed old fisherman called Joe, who makes a living out of Eerchos lobsters and crabs.

The other is a part-time fisherman. When he isn't fishing he looks after a cloakroom in Jersey. If I caught his name right it is Dan.

Both of them were there when the liberation party landed. Over in the Hague international lawyers were at work deciding their fate, but Joe, oblivious of high politics, was calmly mending his lobster pots.

The other Briton, with equal nonchalance, was making a pot of tea.

With field glasses we scanned the enemy coast. They appeared to have been completely taken

By surprise. There wasn't a sign of hostility anywhere — only a few people bathing. Sometimes in more belligerent mood the French send landing parties of Boy Scouts or girl naturalists who spend the day on British soil without so much as a passport.

They also send fishermen to collect oysters. Oysters are large shellfish reputed to taste like veal and a delicacy in Jersey as well as France.

THEIR KING

IN the past there have been clashes between the fishermen, but now, says Joe, they are few, and the only really unwelcome visitors from France are the Colorado beetles that use the rocks as a staging post on their flights to Jersey.

You can find them on the high-water mark hiding in the seaweed.

There used to be a "king" of Eerchos. He was called Philippe Finaud and he lived on the rocks for 48 years. Queen Victoria gave him a red coat as a badge of office.

He had his own methods of keeping the French at bay. He made his living burning seaweed to get fertilizer, and the smell was so awful that few came near. He retired to Jersey and a less odorous life in 1893.

What about our Union Jack? I must not forget that. Joe was the most interested party because he makes his living here, so his was the hand that raised it.

Do you know the words of "Ye Mariners of England"?

The flag that braved a thousand years, the battle and the breeze... They still give me a lump in the throat.

WEEK-END WOMANSENSE

FOR THE COCKTAIL PARTY—in pastel cell.

No backs at all...

Susan Deacon's News for Women

I GREET with wonderment and joy the new fashion arrival from the Continent—the Bare Backed Sandal.

We heard whispers from Italy... the new shoes have no heels, and rumours from France... they are quite bare at the back... We saw pictures of them in the American magazines, but not so soon, I thought, would they come to Britain.

British women seem to suffer from their feet. They like open toes and wedge heels. Comfort first.

But this elegant, fashionable and flattering new shoe style is well on the way even to beating the ankle strap sales.

DON'T imagine for a moment that men will like them. They won't.

And DON'T imagine that they are comfortable. They aren't.

If you have a low instep you will have trouble keeping them on, and if you have a high instep they still feel as if they are falling off.

But I predict that all fashion conscious women will buy a pair.

New colours

FIRST of the autumn and winter fashions seen in London showed no change so far in the silhouette, but there are new colours and fabrics.

Sherry brown and benedictine with black, cream de menthe, pink gin, grenadine, light ale and milk stout are the new inexpensive coat colours.

A lovely slate colour, called "clinders," is new for outdoor and cocktail dresses.

"Tree bark" pleating, which crinkles like chocolate paper is also new for cocktail dresses.

Coronation year wedding fashion will be the all white bridal gown worn with a white fur fabric jacket and pillbox.

Spies are busy

FASHION spies are busy trying to ferret out details of the Queen's summer wardrobe.

I hear that one American fashion house was prepared to spend up to £35,000 for photographs and descriptions of the Queen's clothes. It is the biggest offer yet made for a fashion secret.

The Queen's dressmaker, Norman Hartnell, told me: "...I can never relax our precautions. The Queen's dresses are made up in several parts by different workers, and only a few people see them complete.

"On an important dress, such as the Queen's wedding dress, I had to have a 24-hour-a-day guard on the building, and had to black out all downstairs windows.

"The sketches are seen by only two people—my dressmaker and myself."

heart (but seems to forget to put into practice).

If you sunbathe without using a sun oil you get burned.

Dark glasses prevent eye wrinkles.

Salt water is bad for the hair.

You can buy waterproof mascara.

Which set?

PEOPLE are wondering which set Princess Alexandra will belong to when she leaves school.

Her two main interests, so far, are horse riding and ballet.

Will she join the "hunting field" set, or will she develop her interest in ballet, and her love of the theatre and West End life?

The new photograph of Princess Alexandra shows that, at 15, she has a sophistication rather unusual in a British Princess.

Instead of the single row of small pearls the Princess wore a double row pearl choker.

She had used lipstick, and has recently had her hair permmed.

Princess Margaret first appeared in public wearing a red lipstick and diamonds when she was 10.

WHAT WILL THEY BE WEARING NEXT? FASHION FORTNIGHT GIVES THE ANSWER

The big change is FUR

by EILEEN ASCROFT

YOUR winter top coat will be fur-trimmed; that is an important fashion change revealed in the first parade of Fashion Fortnight.

Second big parade was of furs, ranging from £50 beaver lamb coats to £5,000 wild mink.

Opening this combined fur show, Lord Waverley, director of the Hudson's Bay Co., said that Britain's export business in dressed furs last year reached £1 1/2 million, a 46 percent increase on the previous year.

Fashion notes were the wide, deep cuffs on most coats, the small tailored collars and soft shoulder lines.

New form of stole in Russian sables had a cape-like back and cuff effect.

Unusual fur combinations were a black Persian lamb hip jacket trimmed with silver-blue mink.

A natural musquash was treated like a cloth coat tailored with a fitted half-tail in front. Another mink cape stole was made of strands shading from breath of spring mink to silver-blue, pastel and wild and ranch mink.

New materials

MATERIAL shown at the first of the fabric exhibitions was a mixture of rayon and flax from Northern Ireland. A cross-dyeing process is used to give a colourful effect.

Two dyes are put in one bath; each fibre picks up a different dye.

New export fabrics are the tropical and Panama rattan made from 100 percent rayon by some of the West of England, worsted firms.

How much to live?

CONDUCTING a middle-income family quiz I find that the average London couple think a "modest but adequate" level of living should cover a small car, domestic help and good day schools for the children. Minimum annual income on which this can be achieved is £1,550. It costs almost as much to live in London these days as in Washington, one of the most expensive cities in the world.

To provide a "modest but adequate" level of living for an average family in Washington, the Labour Department's annual survey gives the necessary family income figure as £1,551.

It's "Exit Austerity"

By Dorothy Barkley

LONDON'S fifth "Fashion Fortnight"—the two weeks each June when British fashions of all kinds are on show to overseas buyers—was assured of success even before it had been opened by the President of the Board of Trade. Over four hundred buyers—one hundred more than last year—from all parts of the world had accepted invitations. They represented stores in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Canada, the West Indies, East Africa, Malaya, Hong-kong and many other countries.

As soon as buyers had arrived and the "Fortnight" had opened, one thing was clear. The austerity, so characteristic of post-war British fashion, had disappeared. There was no drabness, no dullness. There were none of those "classic" British tweeds and mackintoshes whose styles had conceded very little to fashion in the last ten years and which would probably change as little in the years to come.

Coronation year

Now, however, the wholesale manufacturers, have begun to interpret the fashion line launched by the couturiers more carefully, and reproduce it more faithfully.

At the Fashion Fortnight shows, the "off-the-peg" clothes were charming, feminine and individual. So fashions for Coronation year promise to be memorable.

The overseas buyers had to be hustled. Fashion shows, exhibitions and receptions followed one another like clockwork. The week began in style with a parade of coats and suits in the Grosvenor House ballroom.

Now colours included coronation red, blue-grass and gull grey. The coats were mostly cut on pyramid lines, with dolman or deep bat-wing sleeves, their fullness narrowing at the wrist.

Fur-trimmed

Suits reflected the "masher" style, and had un-waisted jackets, straight skirts. They were in two-tone checks or stripes for country wear, bartheles for town. Cocktail suits were lavishly trimmed with jet and cord embroidery.

One aspect of these styles will bring back memories to our grandmothers. Coats and cuffs were coyly trimmed with fur. (Persian lamb, Canadian beaver or blue fox). Somewhere else, in another show, fur was seen trimming a bathing suit!

FASHION FORTNIGHT SPECIALS.—Double-breasted black turtleneck with coat in head coloured peach-bloom overline.

The London family man on a £1,550 income with two children, to start with must part with £290 3s. income-tax. He pays an average £4 a week for his house or flat, 15s. a week for his garage and £1 5s. for domestic help.

Household expenses include £6 a week for food and laundry; £1 10s. a week for gas, electricity and telephone and heating, and 30s. a week to run his car. Pocket money for the wife, including cost of her clothes, was about £8 a month.

A fortnight's holiday for the family usually came to £50. Most husbands reckoned it cost them £100 for both children's school fees and another £50 for their clothes.

Average husband has about £200 left from his quite substantial salary for his travelling expenses, lunches, clothes, house and car repairs, life and house insurance and entertaining his friends.

Babes in church

CHILDREN should start their church-going from the age of three, says the Rev R. Legge, of St George's, Brentford. In his own church he provides baby-minders in the nearby church hall for young members of the congregation who become restless.

Miss Emily Cunningham, of the American Embassy, says that American Embassy frequently have nurseries attached, where mothers can take it in turn to look after young children.

The Duke of Cornwall was 3 1/2 when his mother first took him to church at Windsor.

Practical suggestion from a child expert: take the child into the church once or twice before his first service so that he is used to the surroundings.

(World Copyright Reserved—London Express Service)

Starke also introduced a new—to some it may seem eccentric—suit line. It is illustrated here in black and white tweed. Classically casual in this black and white tweed suit, its most prominent features are the low dropped shoulder line, and voluminous sleeves. There was certainly no austerity here.

For "winter sports or motor-ing" one manufacturer suggested a snow white fur fabric coat; it had narrow waist, back fullness, and fastened with contrasting black buttons. Another good sports or travel coat, in alpaca, had a zipped-in lining.

Cocktail raincoat

The Raincoat show had an air of luxury which defied austerity. There was a dramatic evening cloak in black rubenised satin, lined with white; an iridescent gabardine coat, shot with grey and gold; a "cocktail raincoat," in black poult with a gold metallic stripe, complete with matching umbrella. Many of these raincoats had matching hat and shoes.

The star of the show was undoubtedly Vivienne's "Playing Card" raincoat.

The most enchanting colour scheme of the week was introduced by Frederick Starke. He suggested a new shade, "sun bronze"—a rich brown semi-scent of vermilion—as an excellent complement to black. This colour scheme was equally effective for organic cocktail dresses and tweed suits, as for evening wear.

In rubberised cotton, this raincoat was cut on the same pyramid line fashionable for overcoats. Its pattern played black playing cards on a yellow ground.

PRACTICAL HOMECRAFT

OLD ROOM - NEW LOOK

OLD FURNITURE in this home has had a new look at little cost. The secret is slip covers. In textured fabric, solid covers are used on sofa and chair. Plaid fabric covers another chair. Decorating was done with suggestions from a colour scheme expert.

By JOAN O'SULLIVAN

YOU've been casting a bright eye on furniture ads, wishing you could throw all your old things out, do the house over from attic to cellar. This is a desire to decorate that usually hits homemakers hardest.

Actually, this is a good time of year to perk up the premises. You've probably treated yourself to a new outfit and some bright accessories. You should do the same for your home.

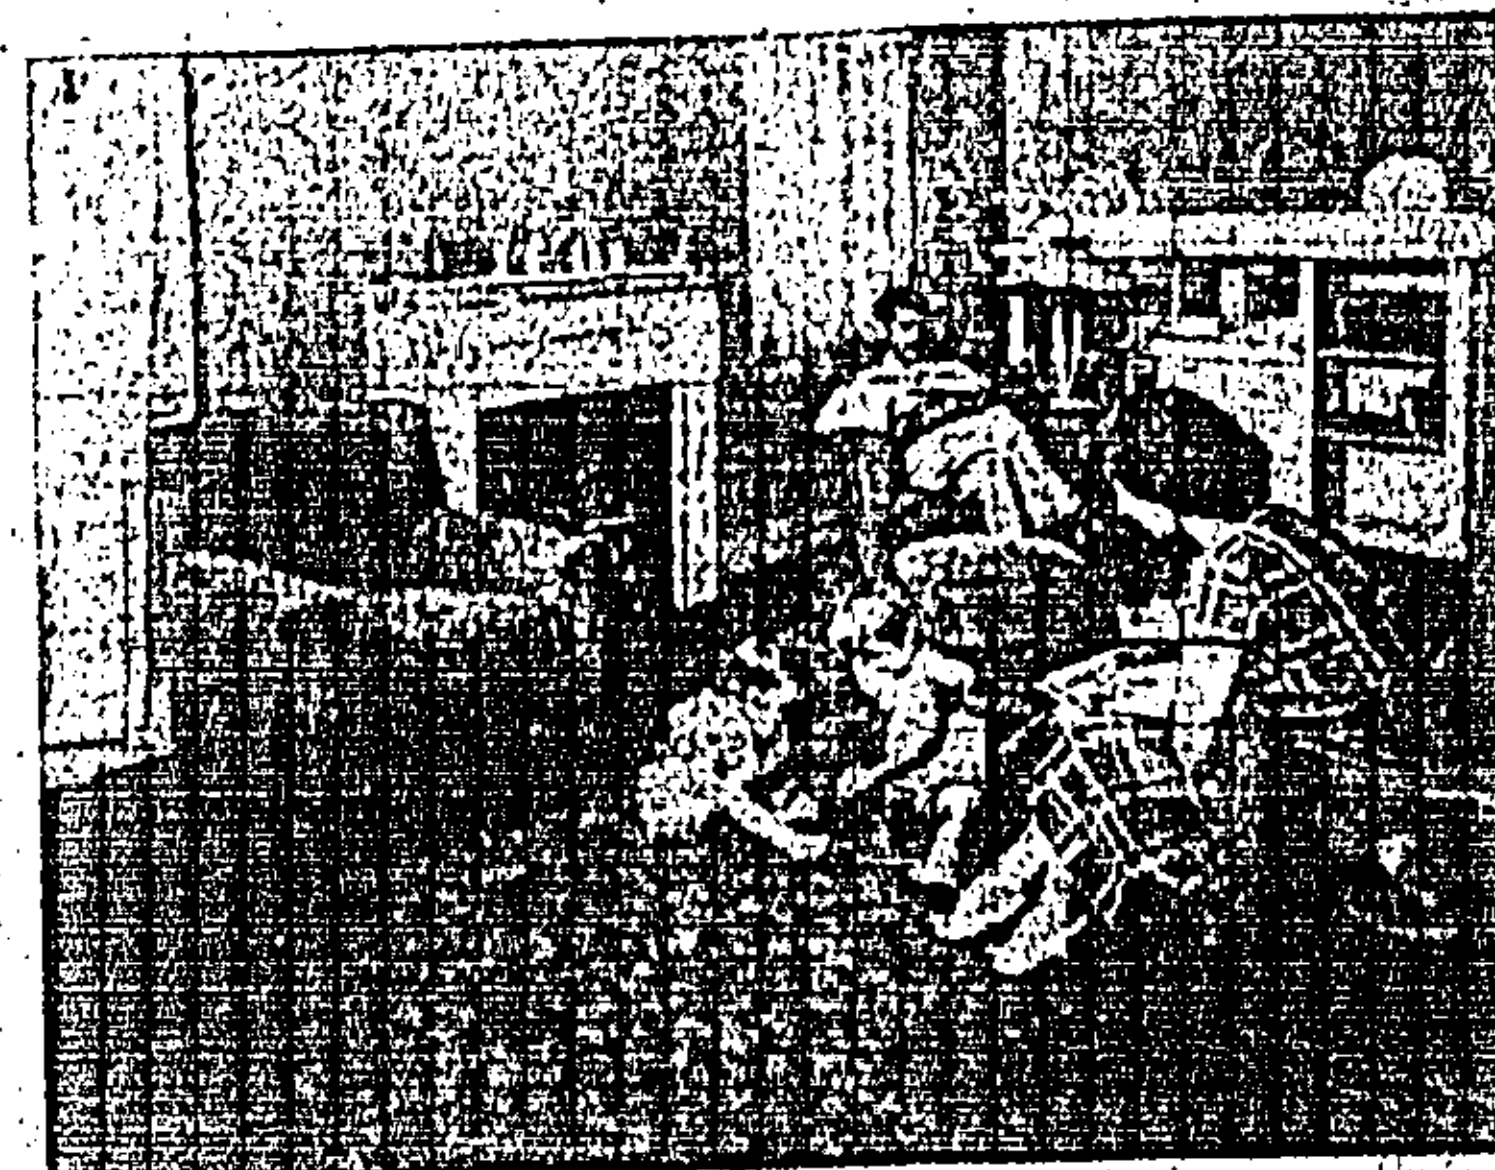

You can spend a lot of money, or a little. That's up to you and the figures in the family budget book.

An Indianapolis family started from the floor—with a new carpet—and worked up. The carpet, reasonably priced in 9 x 12 size, was chosen in rosy-beige. The embossed pattern proved attractive and, on the practical side, it cut down on footprint marks.

Next, a drab window at one end of their living room was dramatised with a gay chintz-covered frame and glass curtains. On either side of the window, the decorator suggested hanging wall-planters filled with ivy.

Four floral prints were framed to hang over a new blue and gold striped sofa. Three chairs were re-upholstered—one in a striped to match the other two in solid blue. A fourth chair had a new gold slip cover.

The family painted walls rosy-beige to match the rug. They did this job them-

BEFORE IT WAS DONE, here's how the room above looked. The patterned rug made it appear small. Not so the new solid carpet.

OUTDATED AND LACKING in charm, the living room of this Indianapolis home was badly in need of decorating. It looked too bare.

And also made the curtains and slip cover to cut expenses.

Slip covers were also responsible for an attractive and inexpensive change in the living room of another family—this one in Philadelphia—who had decorating on the agenda. They chose a bold plaid cover for one chair, made drapes to match. The sofa and a club chair were covered in a solid shade.

Before their decorating advice arrived with the mail man, they had used a patterned rug that was small and gave the room a chopped-up look. The colour scheme expert suggested a wall-to-wall carpet in soft green. It was a large expenditure but worth the outlay because it made the room appear larger.

Another trick that helped create an illusion of spaciousness was employed over the fireplace. The entire wall was covered with a plate glass mirror above the mantel.

In addition to the carpet, new purchases included black lacquer and tables and oversized white lamps.

WINDOW INTEREST was created with a chintz-covered frame and glass curtains. A new sofa, re-upholstered chairs, an attractive carpet in a rosy-beige shade helped to transform the room above right.

Decorative Lamps Can Be Made Out Of Practically Anything!

—And make them yourself

By ELEANOR ROSS

THE show was of lamps—beautiful original lamps—made not only from old lamps but from such utilitarian objects as pickle jars, large empty fruit juice tins, old gallon jugs, pieces of statuary, vases, and even bowling pins, fitted with the stock lamp conversion accessories that cost so little and are obtainable everywhere.

Filled with Concrete

An old grapefruit juice tin had been filled with concrete to give it weight and balance, sprayed with paint, and a circular piece of wood added for the base. This was fixed in place with a single quarter-inch-diameter carriage bolt embedded in the fresh concrete head first and left there while the concrete set, with enough of the bolt protruding to hold the cardboard.

Another job, done with the same medium, was a product of genius. The oldster making it just took the tin to a local electroplating outfit and had them give it a heavy copperplate coating that, when buffed and lacquered, looked like one of those hundred-dollar modern lamps. The shades were of the heavily oiled paper sold in the artists' material shops for the making of stencils.

There were some especially handsome lamps that had started life as tall, unwieldy floor lamps once so popular. They had been rescued from junk shops for the proverbial penny, and beautifully done over.

The first thing was to cut these oldies down to a more sensible height, and it was remarkable how nice they looked, once reduced by anything from eight to twelve inches. Since many such lamps have an iron conduit all the way up to carry the electric cord, we were told that a hack saw was necessary for the cutting job. New cords were installed, new fixtures such as sockets, and, in most cases, three-way switches were used. Then came coats of pastel enamel, new shades, and these were—on a lot of handsome lamps that found ready purchasers.

Bowling Pin Lamps

Going like hot cakes, too, was the stock of bowling pin lamps—some made from new pins, some from old ones. The top had been cut down a couple of inches, and at the bottom a base was affixed with a large wood screw. A hole was drilled into the top and in fixture (also a standard piece) to make it into a lamp.

The new pins look lovely in their smooth original finish, but old battered ones can do with a nice quick-drying enamel coating. Topped with a smart shade, it would grace the finest modern interior.

LUSCIOUS STRAWBERRY DESSERTS

By ALICE DENHOFF

GOOD crops of strawberries bring colour and ideas to our local markets as the homemaker shops for thrifty buys. Here are some strawberry recipes that we hope may appeal to you.

For those who like to take a little extra time and effort in preparing something special, try Strawberry Meringue Pudding, the recipe to serve 6-8.

Meringue Pudding

Sift 1/2 c. cake flour; measure and resift three times with 1/2 c. baking powder and 1/2 tsp. salt. Beat 4 whole eggs until light and lemon-coloured; add 1/2 c. sugar gradually, beating constantly. Add 1/2 tsp. vanilla. Stir the dry ingredients into the egg mixture gradually, and fold in carefully.

Turn batter into a greased 8-inch layer cake pan and bake at 350° F. for 20-25 minutes. Cool 5 minutes in pan, then turn out onto cake rack to cool.

Place cooled cake on large, flat baking sheet and spread over top one pint berries sliced and sweetened to taste. Cover completely with a meringue, made by adding a dash of salt to 2 egg whites, and beating until stiff but not dry. Gradually beat in 1/4 c. sugar, until thick and smooth.

Return to oven and bake for 15 additional minutes at 350° F., or until meringue is a golden brown. This may be served warm or cold with a custard sauce which will take care of the 2 egg yolks.

Strawberry Whip

For a light, delicious dessert, prepare this Strawberry Whip, which serves 4.

Wash, drain and hull one c. fresh strawberries. Place with one c. sugar and one unbeaten egg white in a bowl and beat with a whisk for about 10 minutes, or until mixture is thick. Fold 1/2 c. heavy cream that has been whipped, and chill. Serve in sherbet glasses with little cookies or cake.

Strawberries star in a delicate, delicious fruit melange. To serve 6, wash and hull one pint berries; cut in quarters. Place in 6 sherbet glasses and add one c. sliced pineapple, tinned or fresh. Add 1/2 c. each pineapple juice, orange juice and one tsp. lemon juice to 1/2 c. sweetened condensed milk, beating thoroughly until well mixed. Pour mixture over berries in sherbet glasses and chill thoroughly. Garnish each glass with a whole white berry.

CHILDREN'S DIGESTIVE DISEASE

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

SOMETIMES a child's digestive system cannot handle fats and carbohydrates, or starches, or both.

This gives rise to a set of complaints known to doctors as the celiac syndrome. As a rule, it appears before the baby is a month old.

These children do not seem to get nourishment from the food they eat; and show signs of malnutrition, such as stunted growth. The abdomen appears large and swollen. The bowel movements are another important sign. These are bulky and have a very foul odor.

The first symptoms are usually the foul, bulky movements, and a cough. As a rule, the child fails to gain weight normally, and frequent adjustments of the formula do not generally help.

A laboratory test can be made of the bowel movement to help identify this trouble. Normally, the stool contains 20 to 25 per cent fat; but in this condition it may contain as much as 75 per cent.

In most cases of celiac disease, the proper treatments clear up the cough, and there is no serious infection of the lungs or bronchial tubes. If a child is fairly sick, it may be necessary for him to take fluids through a vein and to have blood transfusions and antibiotic drugs.

The right diet is very important in correcting this digestive trouble. It should contain liberal quantities of vitamin Protein milk is correct for the formula or early diet; and the child can usually digest it most easily. Skimmed milk with banana powder is also very helpful. The older child may be fed scraped beef, tomato juice, mashed banana, cottage cheese, and gelatin.

As the child improves, meats, chicken, lamb, liver, and certain vegetables may be added and, finally, toast.

This condition may hang on for a number of years but eventually almost all children with celiac disease get well. But several years may elapse before the child can eat a normal diet and grow in a completely normal way.

YOUR SLIP IS SHOWING, SONIA

I MET Sonia, London's latest Crime Queen, in a low cafe (a basement, in fact) off Tottenham Court Road.

Here, the svelte, slant-eyed seductress babbled on in a shady nook while dog-trailers and common passed by and peered in to pay homage to Sonia's beauty.

Absent-mindedly she slipped a handful of hashish into her cup of cocoa and then, fully dressed—into her sordid story.

"I was little more than an innocent child at the time," she said, "the only convictions I'd had being merely for loitering and letting my hair down in public."

She patted her raven tresses, coiled like an enormous main-spring around her head. She smiled her Mona Lisa smile.

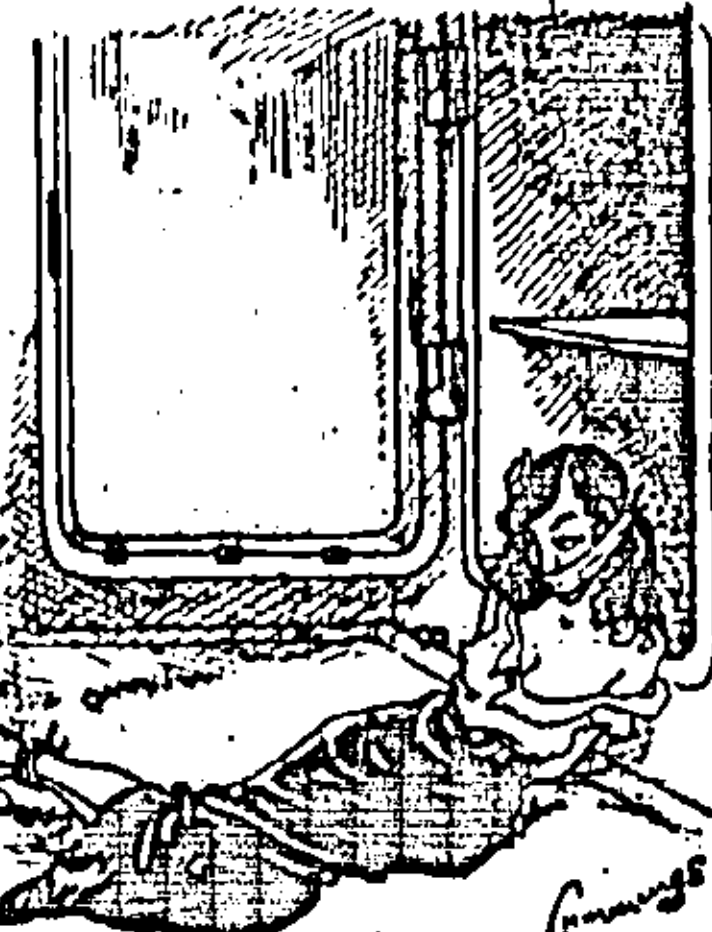

"When a Parisian parasite named Ru (short for Rupert) Morgue got me into his clutches I was an wax in his cruel, supple fingers."

"I thought," Sonia went on, "he only wanted me to become a dancer with a troupe of Abominable Showgirls. Instead he forced me to help him rob the Grand National Bank, Aintree."

A huge fear trickled down Sonia's beautiful nose. It dropped noisily into her cocoa, waking a fence at the next table.

"With references forged by Phil, a phoney fairground fakir from Fellsdown," Sonia continued, "I became secretary to the bank manager. Within a week I was taking his mind off his work and he was taking me off to morning coffee and cakes."

The Crime Queen paused nervously sipping her cocoa into chocolate mousse as she said: "The night for Ru Morgue's coup arrived. I was working late, and was alone at the bank. Midnight and three raps came at the front door. "Putting on my mink wrap, I answered them. It was Ru. I let him in, and he went to work on the safe deposit vault."

Quickly Ru filled with banknotes a plain van waiting outside.

"Then he tied me up and gagged me (with a gag he'd borrowed from an American radio show on the short wave). He left me. The caretaker, who I'd taken care should be out at the time, found me some time later and fetched the police."

"When the police questioned me I told them how I'd been gagged and overpowered by three masked men. I described how I'd struggled and failed to get myself free and raise the alarm."

Sonia let another teardrop fall. "Which was where I made a silly slip," she moaned. "I gave the whole show away, and Ru Morgue was sent down."

SONIA'S SLIP is showing in the picture of how the police found her. But if you are not sure you've got it, the solution is on Page 10.

AS WITH US HUMANS SO WITH APES

THE WIFE IS STILL THE BOSS

By CHAPMAN PINCHER

THE doctors who are responsible for probing the minds of Britain's toughest criminals were advised to practise on chimpanzees.

Professor D. O. Hebb, one of the world's greatest authorities on the mind of the ape, lectured to more than 100 psychiatrists and scientists at the Maudsley Hospital, G.E.S., famed research centre for criminal psychology.

"After five years of experiments, I am convinced that caged apes are comparable to a prison population of human beings," the professor said.

As proof of overall similarity between ape and human minds, the slight, fair-haired professor, who comes from Montreal, compared the behaviour of male and female chimps.

"You can easily fool a male chimp, but you cannot fool a female," he said.

"Male chimps, which love to scare the life out of a frightened man, will sit quietly and pretend not to notice you if you squint up."

"A female will deliberately be affectionate just to get near enough to bite the hand that feeds her."

The professor's experiments have shown that though the male chimp seems to be the boss the female generally gets her way.

"The males are big bluffers," he said. "The female is far more skilful in dealing with a social situation which cannot be solved by brute force."

"V... died at 9-16 a.m. Adorable wife. She was good and devoted. Never fair to herself."

Shafts of bright May sunshine came through the lounge window as Dr Robert George Clements sat in his flat overlooking Southport's colourful promenade gardens, and, turning over the pages of his red, leather-bound diary to May 27, 1947, wrote that last tribute to his wife.

Amy Victoria Clements had died less than an hour before in a local nursing home, and, for the fourth time in his life, the 67-year-old doctor had become a widower.

Among their friends in Southport "Bertie" Clements and his wife seemed a devoted couple. Every day for months, on the leaves of that gold-edged expensive personal diary, the doctor had recorded the medical condition of "V," as he called her affectionately.

Many of the notes were of trivial matters, of walks round the marine lake and occasional car rides.

TABLETS

IN that very room a few days later Dr J. B. Firth began his search into the lives of Dr and Mrs Clements. On a mantelpiece, just where she had put it, he picked up from among dozens of other bottles, the "phenobarbitone tablets" which Mrs Clements had been taking to help her sleep.

Systematically he went through the contents of the flat, hunting for anything that might give him the slightest clue to her illnesses.

Occasionally, holiday-makers streaming across the promenade to the beach, caught glimpses of the slightly-built doctor as he brought articles nearer to the window for inspection.

At his home in Birkdale that night Dr Firth spent much time thinking of the articles he had collected, but it was many hours later that he received from Dr W. H. Grace, the Home Office pathologist, the piece of spinal cord through

The Fourth Mrs Clements

Today we publish the first of a new series telling the inside stories of famous crimes taken from the case book of Dr Firth, Director of the Home Office Forensic Laboratory at Preston, England.

The first case is the murder of Amy Clements by her doctor husband at Southport, Lancashire. Dr Clements killed himself by an injection of morphine soon after the police had stopped his wife's funeral. Vital evidence in the case came from a tiny portion of spinal cord.

Dr J. B. Firth, who was born at Stockport in the county of Lancashire, has played a major role in solving most of the big murder mysteries of the north-west of England during the past eleven years. He is recognised as one of the great authorities on forensic science.

The stories are told by Ken Compton.

which Dr Firth made the case of the "last Mrs Clements" a cause célèbre.

For a man who had suffered such a grievous loss Dr Clements seemed very composed as he spent the morning of "V's" death telling friends that she had died from a tumour on the brain. To two specially close friends he added the rather private information that a post-mortem was to be held.

The debaron Irish doctor must have been well pleased when, later, he was able to say that "V" had died from myeloid leukaemia, a rare form of blood disease.

That night he was out at a private dinner party at a cafe where occasionally he and his wife had dined.

Throughout the day messages of sympathy had been arriving from medical men, members of the church where he attended services and other friends. Soon he would have his son and other relatives, already on their way to Southport for the funeral, to comfort him.

NEW LIFE

ALREADY the doctor was supervising the clearing up of flat—one of the life secrets of husband and his wife—looking to the arrival of a housekeeper and a new-style life.

But, as he worked, Lieutenant-Colonel Mighall, Chief Constable of Southport, and senior officers were spinning the web into which the genial old man was fast becoming entangled.

An anonymous postcard in 1939 had arrived an hour or so too late for the police to stop the creation of the doctor's third wife, reputed to have died from cancer. Now, nothing could prevent a full investigation into the mysterious illnesses of the last Mrs Clements.

The doctor was full of indignation when he had to tell his friends the following day that Mr C. Bolton, the Southport Lancashire coroner, had decided to hold an inquest on his wife.

Even then, it seemed that the doctor's luck was going to remain. Dr James Montague Houston, a young pathologist at Southport Infirmary, after conducting the private post-mortem examination, had destroyed the brain and nearly all the other vital organs that Dr Firth would require to prove the police theory that Mrs Clements had been poisoned.

FIRST TIME

THERE was nothing the famous forensic scientist could take as a substitute for the stomach and its contents, but the spinal cord—a cylinder-like piece of material barely as thick as a lady's little finger—might give the same response to the experiments he would have made upon the brain and other organs.

Never before had the spinal cord been used to prove the administration of poison to a dead person. But it was not the first time in his career that Dr Firth had had to break new ground.

Back in his laboratory, it was a comparatively easy task for him to prove that Dr Clements killed himself by an injection of morphine soon after the police had stopped his wife's funeral. For evidence of morphine had been found in the hypodermic syringe pin down by the doctor as he lay dying in his chair.

It was even more simple to establish that young Dr Houston had poisoned himself with cyanide after throwing away accidentally what he believed were

by JAMES STUART

ONE of the world's riskiest jobs is that of the experimental test-pilot.

In the aircraft industry such men as John Cunningham, "Bill" Pegg, "Jock" Bryce, Neville Duke, "Mike" Lithgow and "Bob" Beaumont have the task of taking up new types for the first time and afterwards of finding out what the aeroplanes can do.

In the RAF and the Navy officers whose names seldom hit the headlines do much the same work—evaluating the usefulness of new aeroplanes to the Services, and finding new uses for existing aircraft.

The knowledge they gain goes back to the aircraft scientists and on to the squadron pilots. The test pilots are the men who turn theory into practice.

What kind of qualities are needed for such a job?

The answer comes from one of the world's most experienced test pilots, 31-year-old Lieutenant-Commander Eric Melrose Brown, Chief Test Pilot of the Royal Navy.

"I am convinced," he says, "that the qualities necessary in a first class test pilot are endowed by nature, and not indoctrinated by man. The essential qualities are a keen analytical mind, infinite patience, lightning-like reactions, and an ice-cool brain in emergency."

Many men who brought a high-speed aeroplane safely to the ground after it had been out of control would think only of their narrow escape. But the test pilot must remember what went wrong, what he did to get out of the trouble and what other moves he might have made.

Lieut.-commander Brown sketches such a case. "The pilot may take four desperate but distinctly different courses of action before the rescuers from a disastrous situation in a matter of seconds. Later in the peaceful aftermath of reflection, he should be able readily to recall the line of action he took, but the really great test pilot will also recollect the details of the other three unsuccessful attempts which may reveal something far more important," he says.

BUT for the war, Lieutenant-Commander Brown—who has probably made more catapult launches than any other pilot in the world—might today have been a school teacher. He left Edinburgh University with a Master of Arts degree, and when the war started was in Germany as a student teacher. He escaped from Germany before the authorities could intern him, came home, and with some experience of week-end flying at flying clubs, joined the Fleet Air Arm.

He was soon flying naval fighters, covering our Atlantic convoys against air attack. Brown became a test pilot in 1943, first at Boscombe Down, the Government Aircraft Establishment, and then at the Royal Aircraft Establishment at Farnborough.

Since then he has carried out all kinds of air tests for the Navy's air arm. The Navy's airman, who every day of the week land their aeroplanes on the decks of carriers, take their work for granted.

But a lot of the developments in naval flying have been due to the "infinite patience" of this young Scottish pilot.

About 2,000 times he has landed aircraft on carrier decks, nearly always to carry out some test or other. It was Brown who put the first twin-engined aircraft, a Mosquito, on to the deck of a carrier in 1944. For this he was given the MBE. The following year he made the first deck landing in an even faster Hornet twin-engined fighter, and when the Navy began to look to jets he made the first jet deck landing in a Vampire. These two feats won him the OBE.

Lieut.-commander Brown won the Air Force Cross in 1947 for his research flights in high-speed fighters and in slow hoverplanes. Two years later he carried out the Navy's first experiments with the still rather high-bush flexible rubber deck, landing on it with an aircraft without an under-carriage. This work—which may revolutionise aircraft carriers—won him the King's Commendation, the Navy's Boyd Trophy and the silver medal of the Royal Aeronautical Society.

He also holds the Distinguished Service Cross for his wartime operational flying.

Narrow escapes? He reports rather casually, talking of tests with carrier deck arrestor hooks. "I have had aircraft break completely in half, leaving the rear half firmly attached to an arrestor wire." What happened to the front half with him in it, he leaves to the imagination. And in the "flooded deck" of a fabric-covered biplane, it was a common occurrence to see the whole of the tail aloft when testing rocket-actuated take-offs.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

HANGING above the desk with the other because the film speeds are different.

where Snapshot Guild is written is a card bearing the words: "Keep it Simple." But keeping it simple—and short, too— isn't always easy. For there are certain basic terms in the language of photography which are used again and again. Too often, space is lacking in which such terms may be defined.

So it is easy to sympathise with a reader who complains that on occasion he has had to go to a book on photography to learn the meaning of some word or phrase which has been used here. It's easy to sympathise, yes, and perhaps it's easy to help. For here's a brief list of common terms used in photography, a handful of definitions for the lingo which you are likely to find in this column every now and then.

Lens: Aperture: The opening through which light enters the camera to make a picture. With many cameras this may be varied in size.

Shutter: The device which opens and closes to permit light to pass through the lens.

Shutter Speed: The time during which the shutter remains open to admit light to the film in the camera. For example, 1/50 of a second.

Exposure: The amount of light to which the sensitive film in the camera is exposed. This is determined by size of the lens aperture and the shutter speed.

Focal Length: Roughly, the distance from the lens to the film when the camera is focused on a distant object.

f Number: A number used to denote the aperture of a lens, as f/8, f/11, or f/16. Since the number represents the ratio of the diameter of the aperture to the focal length of the lens, the smaller numbers represent the larger apertures. On most cameras these are arranged so that each f number (or aperture) admits twice as much light to the film as the next higher f number.

Depth of Field: Also called range of sharpness, depth of field refers to the distance—in a picture scene—from the nearest point in sharp focus to the farthest point in sharp focus. The smaller the lens aperture the greater the depth of field.

Film Speed: This refers to the relative amount of light required to produce a satisfactory exposure on different types of film. For example, using two different films to picture the same scene, the exposure with one may be twice the exposure required with the other because the film speeds are different.

Latitude: The degree to which some films can produce acceptable pictures despite reasonable over or underexposure. In short, the "margin of error" built into films to compensate for the mistakes of the picture taker.

Keep these definitions in mind. They'll help you to understand a few of the most commonly used photographic expressions.

THIS DREAM MEANS:

This lobster with its sharp pincers arising out of the water is surely a symbol of aggression and hatred arising out of your unconscious mind. For some reason it seems to be directed against your small brother who seems tantrically unconcerned.

Has he been teasing you unmercifully? Or have they been spelling him to your annoyance?

Whatever the cause, your feelings towards him have become ambivalent (accent on the "bi"); if you remember, the word means to love and to hate someone simultaneously.

YOU WERE SITTING ON YOUR BED SURROUNDED BY WATER IN WHICH WAS A GIANT LOBSTER. YOUR SMALL BROTHER WAS WADING IN THE WATER QUITE UNCONCERNED.

IN THE END YOU HURRIED FROM THE BED TO THE LANDING, SHUT THE DOOR AND FLED DOWNSTAIRS.

You feel rather guilty about the whole matter, yet enraged at the same time; perhaps his indifference makes it worse. Anyway, you refuse to admit your aggression to yourself and in the end you shut the door and fly from the whole situation. Children can be unconsciously cruel—especially when they're angling for a little affection and response; so why not try smothering the trait with kindness.

WINSTON'S FATHER

The 'strange, dramatic story' that sheds new light—after 47 years—on a tragic and frustrated career

by Robert Blake

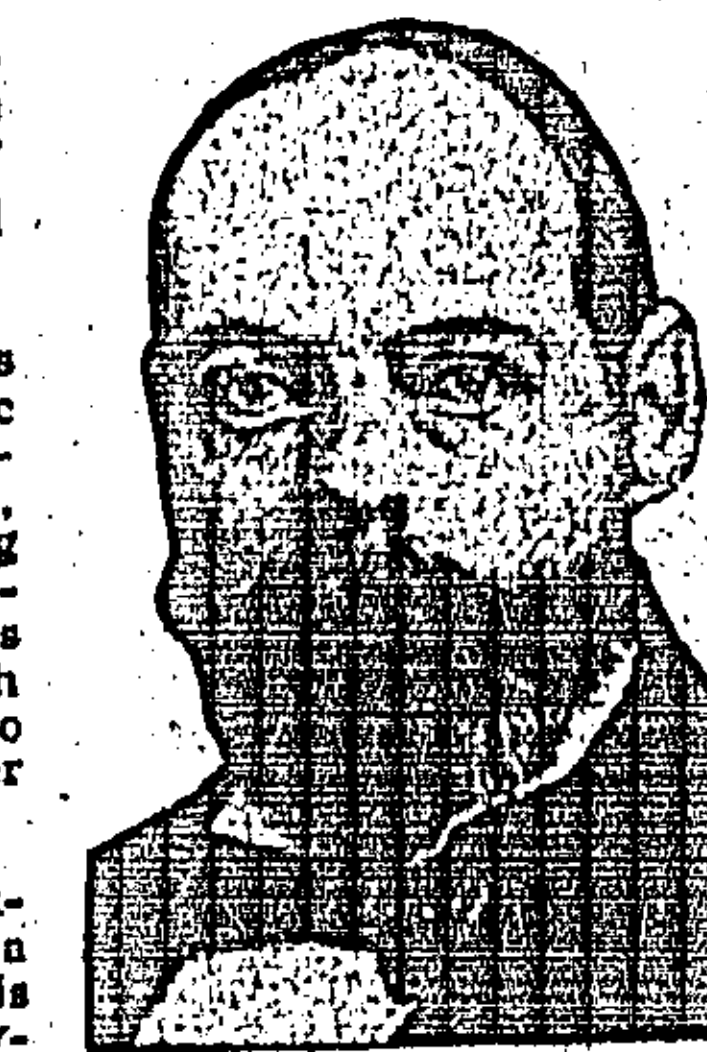

MR CHURCHILL'S Life of his father, Lord Randolph Churchill, is the finest political biography written in the twentieth century. Couched in the majestic language of a modern Gibbon, it tells a strange and dramatic story of the greatest interest, both political and personal. Everyone will welcome the new edition, appeared 47 years after the original publication of the book.

Lord Randolph Churchill's career in politics was meteoric in every sense of that much-abused word. Emerging in 1880, he blazed with ever increasing brilliance upon the Parliamentary scene, like Milton's comet "perplexing nations with the fear of change" only to vanish in 1886 into the outer spaces of political extinction.

How did an unknown backbencher become in a brief time the foremost figure of his party, at the age of thirty-seven Chancellor of the Exchequer and Leader of the House of Commons? Why did he fall so suddenly from that giddy eminence—and fall never to rise again? These are the questions which Mr Churchill's long and fascinating biography seeks to answer.

His success was due in part to the curious political situation which prevailed in 1880.

Lord Randolph Churchill by Winston Churchill (Odhams, 21s.).

guard in both the great political parties were singularly impervious to the significance of that fact.

Lord Randolph Churchill was young, gay, witty and remarkably clever. He saw at once that the future lay with the party which could interpret the inarticulate aspirations of the new electorate.

He saw that neither the Liberal leaders nor his own leaders—Disraeli died in 1881—had any understanding of the new forces in society. He perceived golden dividends for a Tory opposition which attacked the Liberals not for being too radical but for being too cautious and too conservative.

The Conservative leaders were Lord Salisbury in the House of Lords, Sir Stafford Northcote in the House of Commons. The latter was a mild and elderly person deeply imbued with the traditions of the House, and a great admirer of Mr Gladstone, whom he treated with courtesy and deference, likewise to the younger members of the Tory Party. Lord Randolph was determined to drive him out of active politics.

Together with the cool and enigmatic Arthur Balfour, Lord Randolph Churchill formed the so-called Fourth Party. Its object was, behind a facade of civility, to attack and undermine the prestige of the official Conservative leader. Sir Stafford Northcote was given the nickname of "the goat"—an irreverent allusion to the shape of his beard. Lord Randolph and his friends declared eternal war upon all those whom he himself once described as "the old men who crowned over the fires of the Carlton Club."

BANISHED

These harassing tactics inside the House of Commons were accompanied by popular appeals outside. Like his son, Lord Randolph was a master of irony, invective, and rhetoric. Before long he became the leading exponent of "Tory Democracy" in the country.

The first stage of his ambition was reached in 1885 when a Conservative "cardinal" Government took office. At Lord Randolph's insistence Sir Stafford Northcote was banished to the "dignified" obscurity of a peerage, and Randolph himself became Secretary for India.

Only one barrier now lay between Lord Randolph and the highest position. But that barrier was formidable. Lord Salisbury possessed a fame, a prestige and an intellectual capacity of the first magnitude. Moreover he hated democracy and regarded progress as an illusion. The House of Cecil has seldom been in the vanguard of the people's cause and Lord Salisbury was no exception. He regarded Lord Randolph with profound scepticism and no small apprehension.

For the moment he could do nothing to halt Lord Randolph's progress. The Irish crisis of 1886, however, which Lord Randolph plunged with all the vigour resulted in a Conservative victory.

In the Cabinet of 1886 Lord Randolph Churchill became Chancellor of the Exchequer and Leader of the House of Commons. Yet within six months his political career was at an end.

HIS BLUNDER

It is true that Lord Randolph treated finance with a certain levity. "I forget," he once said, "was I a bimetalist at the India Office?" And on another occasion, when some figures expressed in decimals had been explained to him, he observed, "I never could make out what those damned dots meant."

But his ruin came not from faulty arithmetic, but from impetuous temperament. After a long series of arguments with the rest of the Cabinet he suddenly, in December resigned on a minor point concerned with Army estimates. To his surprise Lord Salisbury accepted his resignation and made no attempt to persuade him to withdraw. "Did you ever know a man," Lord Salisbury said, "who having got rid of a ball on his neck wanted another?" Lord Randolph never held office again.

It becomes clearer than ever how fatal a blunder Lord Randolph had committed in resigning on such an issue when it was still a Budget secret; clearer, too, how determined Lord Salisbury was to avoid a reconciliation with his turbulent lieutenant.

GREATEST EVER AAA CHAMPIONSHIPS ARE ON TODAY

By "RECORDER"

Running of a higher standard that has ever been witnessed in England—the last Olympic Games inclusive—should be seen at the White City today as British and Empire Champions clash in the AAA Championships at the White City.

On the results, the British team for Helsinki will finally be selected. Some, like Roger Bannister, will get their berths whether they do particularly well or not. There has been much outcry in the national press on Bannister's automatic choice, but as many sports writers are for him as are against.

It is pointed out that Bannister refused a place on Britain's team at the last Olympic Games when the Mile standard was not as high as it is now, declining on the ground that he was then too young for the Games.

For the past four years Bannister has trained with one aim in view—and that is victory in the 1,500 Metres in Helsinki. At the White City today he is running only in the Half Mile and his reason for a final big race before the Games at a shorter distance is that he thinks the "Half" is better training for his reflexes to the pressure of competition.

Bannister's principal opponent is likely to be Arthur Wint, the Jamaican runner-up in the last Olympic 800 Metres, unless entries. Others are Ralph Dunkley, Len Eyre, Jack Ashby, A. J. Weeks, Pearson, D. R. Hurst and J. W. Brown, all in the 4:10 class.

In all, 22 British Milers have already broken 4 minutes 20 seconds for the Mile this season and the 28th ranked British Milers up to June 14 was L. Robinson of Yorkshire, with a season's best up till then of 4:23.11.

The Empire challenge will include the Australians, Don MacMillan and John Landy, and, probably, New Zealanders George Hoskins and Maurice Marshall, and Canadians Bill Patnell, Don McEwen and John Ross, all in the 4:10 class. Not to be underestimated is another Helsinki competitor, D. H. Robinson of Bermuda, whose best so far is 4:18.0.

There will thus be a minimum of six Milers running at the White City today who have done 4:10 for the distance or the equivalent 3:32.0 for the 1,500 Metres within the past few months and a possible maximum of 11. Even six should be capable of bringing the AAA record down to 4:04 or 4:05.

CLASSIC NO. 2

Classic No. 2 will be the Three Miles, featuring Gordon Pirie, Chris Chataway, Frank Sando, Alan Parker, George Knight, Freddie Green, and Philip Morgan.

Pirie and Sando have already run the distance this season in under 14 minutes and Chataway has run the Two Miles in 8:55.5 and the Three Miles in 14:12.8. Since his new British record in the Two Miles there is no doubt left that Chataway can come under 14 minutes too.

Other season's bests are 14:00, Parker; 14:04.4, Knight; 14:07.4, Green; 14:07.0, Morgan. There is no reason why all four should not join the under 14 minutes procession.

The only Empire competition will come from Australian Les Perry, who is not in the same class.

The 30th best performer of the British season in this event to date is D.H. Robinson, the Bermudian, with a best of 15:03.8. Twenty-eight Englishmen and one Scotsman are already under 15 minutes for their best this season.

SOME OTHER STANDARDS

Eleven British runners had run the Quarter Mile in under 50 seconds by June 14 and 19 others are under 51.1 seconds.

If Arthur Wint runs in the 880 Yards only, the likely winner today is Edwin Carr, the Australian, with Alan Dick, P. G. Fryer, Derek Johnson, Les Lewis, F. P. Higgins, Terence Higgins and J. E. Grant as the principal British competition, all likely to come under 40 seconds.

In the Half Mile, the standard has not been hit in the top bracket so far, but 1:58.3 has been beaten this season by 30 British runners.

One of the best races of the Championships should be the 440 Yards Hurdles with the British defenders, Harry Whitte (53.6), D.K. Gracie (53.0), Angus Scott (54.2) and A. J. Hardy (54.0) up against the Australian Champion, Ken Doubleday (53.5) and New Zealanders Derek Steward (53.7 two years ago). Another likely competitor is the New Zealand Champion, John Holland, with a best of 52.2 seconds this year.

Some other British 30th bests this season: 100 Yards—10.3 seconds; 220 Yards—23.2 seconds; 110m Hurdles—1:50.0; Long Jump—21 feet 2 inches; Hop, Step & Jump—42 feet 4 1/2 inches; Shot Put, 40 feet 3 inches; Discus Throw, 117 feet 10 1/2 inches; Javelin Throw, 100 feet 0 inches; The Discus, Javelin and Pole Vault standards are exceptionally high for Britain.

WILL HE DO IT THIS TIME?

Frank Sedgman, the Australian holder of the American Championship, is seeded No. 1 in the Men's Singles at Wimbledon. He has never won at Wimbledon, but the Australian Davis Cup hero is regarded as the favourite in the tournament which starts on Monday.

Controlling Shots In The Wind

By MAX FAULKNER

So many handicap golfers make a hash of their game whenever they come up against windy conditions that I am devoting all my space this week to "beating the wind." Playing good golf in a high wind may not be easy, but it isn't half as difficult as so many people try to make out.

Get the panic out of your mind for a start. Realise that you can beat these conditions by just knowing how to go about it.

To many people the wind that is blowing from left to right of the fairway—the one which beats into your back—is probably the worst. When I meet this I keep to my ordinary grip. But I remember that the main danger is that my arms will be blown outwards a little—that is into a more upright swing than usual—and that if I allow that to happen I shall be tending to cut across the ball at impact and produce the cut which the wind will turn into a furious slice.

I remember that danger; then I counteract it by swinging slightly flatter than usual and by taking the club a little further round my right hip.

This produces more of the in-to-out swing and completely eliminates any tendency to slice. Many professionals alter their grip—putting the left hand a little more over the shaft and the right hand under—to produce a slight hook to counter the effect of the wind. Best thing is to do whichever suits you best.

WIND IN YOUR FACE
When the wind is blowing from right to left—that is, into your face as you strike—you should reverse the procedure. I think it out before I address the ball and decide just what I intend to do. It is no use trying to make up your mind in the middle of the swing. I swing more upright than usual—to avoid any tendency to produce a draw or hook which the wind could accentuate. In these conditions you might try a slight grip variation—with the left hand a fraction more under the shaft than usual and the right hand a fraction more over.

When the wind is dead against you, it is absolutely essential to hit firmly through the ball. Don't try to hit the ball out of sight. Play your ordinary stroke. I play off the left heel as usual and try to lean a little more on to my left foot as I come into the strike and swing through. This helps to keep the ball low in trajectory and gives it a boring effect to carry it further.

When the wind is helping down the fairway, take every advantage of it. Tee a little higher than usual—the ball more off the left than usual so that the tendency is to strike on the upswing. Above all—follow through. If you are pitching to a green, remember to drop shorter than usual.

DON'T EXAGGERATE
One of the vital things to remember in all these points is—do not exaggerate any of the modifications you apply. At all times be certain that you are firmly settled on your feet for your shot—balance is essential—and hit through the ball all the time.

It is important, too, to resist the temptation which so easily arises, to hit the ball extra hard. This only upsets your rhythm and produces more faults than ever. Don't over-estimate what the wind can do. If it is against you, for instance, merely take a stronger club and hit normally—through the ball. There is no need to slog.

Another point—try to avoid a sway. Getting well settled on your feet and keeping your head still will do that. Some professionals find that gripping their clubs just a fraction shorter than usual helps them to greater control when it is really rough. I haven't found much help in this, but you might. Lastly, don't be afraid to play the old fashioned run-up to the green in these conditions. It is by far the safer and more profitable approach. So don't be afraid of the wind; stand firmly, don't exaggerate your modifications of swing, or grip, or don't sway, but do hit through the ball every time.

the BOYS and GIRLS PAGE

Gold Mining With Kid Gloves

By HAROLD GLUCK

HER name was Louise. Amelia Knapp Smith Clappe and she was married to a physician, Dr. Fayette Clappe. In 1849 they both went to California, America. This was during the time when everyone was looking for gold. From all over the world—from South America, from Asia, and from Europe they came in search of the precious yellow dust.

Louise and her husband lived in a log cabin on Indian Bar. While he took care of the sick she noticed everything that happened and always behaved like a perfect lady. Once she took a very dangerous trip in a wagon along a very dangerous precipice. One misstep and the wagon and passengers would be thrown to a terrible death. Louise was terribly scared and managed to keep very silent. When the trip was finished the driver paid her this compliment, "Well, I guess you're the only woman that ever rode over that are hell without hollering."

One afternoon she was invited to watch some miners work. Louise arrived at the mine with a pot and a pile of kid gloves which matched her beautiful dress. All she had to do was to bend and pick up some little pieces of pure gold.

Miners was as simple as that. Later Louise learned that the kind hearted miners had simply dropped pieces of gold in the sand so that she could have the thrill of saying she had mined gold.

CLASS windows were very scarce in the many cabins built by the miners. Five young hard working miners built a cabin on the side of a hill. As the leading lady of the community she was invited with others to dine there. The cabin was lighted in a manner that was truly ingenious. Three feet in length of a log on one side of the room was removed, and glass jars inserted in its place. The space around the necks of the jars was then filled with clay. When it became dark light was supplied by candles. Bottles served as holders for the candles.

Good food was hard to obtain and often you would find in a cabin sacks of flour, sacks of potatoes, kegs of butter, hams, and mackerel. Once Louise and her husband had milk with their coffee. Their host had bought a cow which was the best way to insure a supply of milk.

To pass away the long hours when her husband was busy taking care of his patients, Louise wrote detailed letters to her sister back East. As a result of these, we know exactly how some of the complicated machinery was used by the miners.

Louise once remarked "The most vulgar blackguard will abstain from swearing in the presence of a lady." When they came to California, Louise and her husband lived in a hotel. Unfortunately the walls were very thin and terrible words could be heard. She persuaded her husband to build their own log cabin and commented "My husband has concluded to build a cabin where, at least, I shall not be obliged to hear the solemn names of the Father and the dear Master so mockingly profaned."

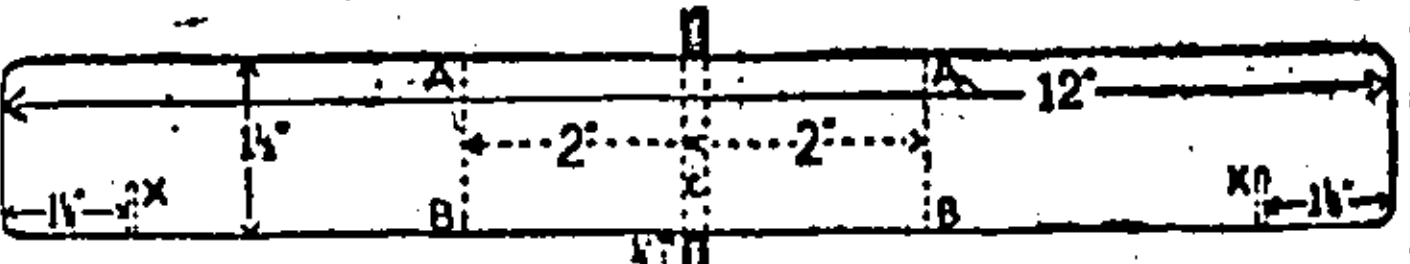

Louise paid eight dollars a dozen to have her handkerchiefs washed while in San Francisco. At the mines there was a small woman who weighed only eighty-six pounds, but she made more money than her husband. After all the expenses were paid, this little woman made one hundred dollars a week profit as a washing woman.

FOOD was brought into the little community by mules. When it rained the mules took a long time, to make the trip. The food would be unpacked and then all the miners would rush to buy food with their gold dust. Louise saw potatoes sold for forty cents a pound which was rather expensive even in these days of high prices.

Later Louise became a teacher and had as her students many who became writers in their later years. She died at the age of eighty-seven having lived a full rich Christian existence on this earth.

This one flies backwards

THE CANARD—MAIN WING: X shows position of fins; AB shows two places where wing should be cracked and bent upwards; C shows position of body.

THE Canard, which is a plane that glides tail-first, is easy to fly. Built correctly it will go steadily for 50 yards.

Note—it is important—the placing of the small planes at the nose of the fuselage. There are four main parts: Wing, body, small wing and fins.

MAIN WING—Is a piece of 1-32 in. balsa, two pieces 1 1/2 in. long by 1 1/2 in. wide. Round off the corners.

From the centre of the wing measure 2 ins. outward each side, score a pencil line A to B across the wing and crack gently on the lines. Bend the outer pieces upwards until the tips stand 1 in. above the middle part. Glue along the cracks.

BODY (or fuselage): This is a piece of 1/4 in. balsa, 8 in. long by 1/4 in. wide. Round the corners.

At a point 1/4 in. from one end of the body, glue the main wing in position (see C); it must sit square. Leave it to set.

SMALL PLANE (or stabilizer): This is 1/32 in. balsa, 5 1/2 in. long by 3/4 in. wide. Round the corners and cut it in two pieces each 2 3/4 in. long.

The small planes are glued to the body at the opposite end to the main wing. They should be placed 1/2 in. from the end and 1/4 in. down from the top of the body. Glue both halves so that their tips are 1/4 in. higher than the points where you put the glue.

LAUGHS

Mother was trying to help her daughter with her numbers. "Betty, if you had three sticks of gum and I gave you two more sticks, how many sticks of gum would you have?" Betty answered, "A full pack."

A teacher had been telling a six-year-old boy about All Baba and the Forty Thieves. When she finished she asked him what All Baba said when he wanted to open the entrance to the cave. "Open, sez me!" the boy replied.

Everyone's In Such A Hurry!

—All Except Glive, Who Likes to Take It Easy—

By MAX TRELL

GLIVE the Snail was walking slowly down Daisy Boulevard which led across the field on the other side of the garden wall (I doubt if you've ever noticed Daisy Boulevard on account of its being half-hidden under the grass) when a figure came hopping up rapidly from the opposite direction.

Glive shouted: "Watch where you're going!" But it was too late. The hopping figure bumped right into Glive. Then he and the hopping figure both went toppling over.

Only Had One Foot

It took a minute before Glive could find himself back on his feet again. The only had one foot. He not only had to lift himself up, but lift his whole shell-house up as well.

Glive glared around to see who had knocked him over. He saw Willy Toad standing a few paces off brushing the dust out of his coat.

"Oh, so it was you!" grumbled Glive. "I didn't see you."

"That's the trouble with you young fellows these days," Glive said. "You're in such a hurry that you don't bother looking where you're going. By the way," he added, giving Willy a sharp look, "where were you going?"

"Oh—er—well," stammered Willy. "I wasn't going any place in particular, Glive."

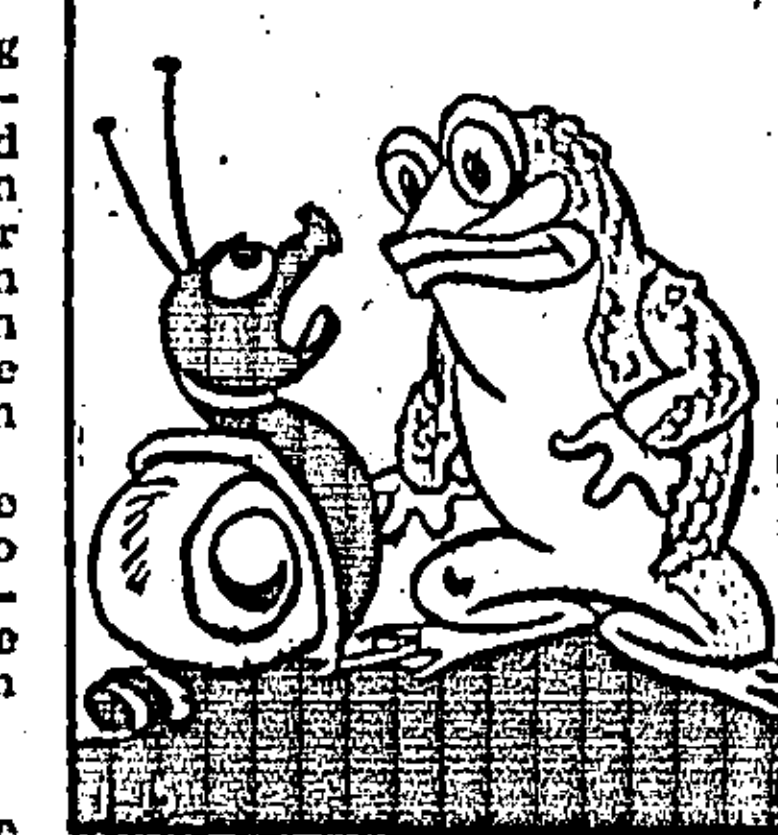

"Then why were you in such a hurry?" Willy looked very ashamed of himself. "You're right, Glive. There wasn't any reason why I should be going so fast—Hey, look out!" Willy suddenly shouted.

"Look out! Look out!" cried Glive in a voice even louder than Willy's.

Too late! Again it was too late. A second later Knarf and Hand, the shadow-children with the turned-about names, went crashing and bumping into Willy and Glive. Everyone went tumbling head-over-heels.

Presently Knarf and Hand got to their feet. Willy got to his feet and finally Glive got to his feet.

"You'd think," said Glive, "that there was a fire!" He scowled at Knarf and Hand.

"Where were you going?" Glive asked Willy.

Here Willy yelled excitedly: "Where, where?"

"Behind the barn!" exclaimed Knarf. "See the smoke?" Willy looked. So did Glive. Sure enough, from behind the barn rose a thick black column of smoke.

"They're right!" said Willy to Glive. "Come on, let's go to the fire!"

Then he raced off with Knarf and Hand.

Picked Up Cane Glive, who was left behind, shook his head. "Hurry—hurry—hurry," he muttered to himself as he picked up his cane, shook out his glove and straightened his hat. "Everybody is in a hurry. And suppose it is a fire. Does it help any to hurry to it unless you're a fire-engine?"

He shook his head again and continued slowly down Daisy Boulevard. "I suppose," he said, still talking to himself, "it might help if you hurried to a fire, even though you weren't a fire engine. You might be able to help put it out... perhaps."

"But most of the time there isn't any fire and folks keep hurrying just the same," he went on. "They hurry so fast that they haven't any time to see where they're going. They don't see the flowers, they don't see the sky, they don't see anything but their own dust."

"I'm mighty glad I can't hurry," said Glive. "It isn't only important to get some place—it's important to see where you're getting while you're getting there. Oh well!"

And he plodded on, looking all around him as he went, not missing a single thing, just moving leisurely along.

Rupert's River Rescue—7

Farmer Brown props the gate against the tree. "We'll leave this here with the rope," he decides. "It may help me when I come back. Thank you again, Rupert." He marches off whistling while the little boat looks at the gate. "There's a name on it," he muttered. "It says Ivy Cottage. I wonder where that can be? I've never heard of it." The gate looks an old one as he doesn't bother but trots away by the edge of the flood. "Before long he spots something else drifting slowly towards him on the water."

NEW DISCOVERY KILLS UNPLEASANT INDOOR SMELLS

THIS WONDERFUL new product, Air-wick, kills unpleasant indoor smells. Frying, and other cooking smells, bathroom smells, stale tobacco smells—Air-wick kills unwanted smells throughout your house.

Air-wick contains chlorophyll—the wonderful substance that keeps growing plants fresh and green—scientifically combined with over 25 other natural compounds. Air-wick is something quite new. It doesn't just cover up unpleasant smells with a stronger one; it really gets rid of smells—in the air!

Air-wick is so simple to use. Unscrew the cap, pull up the wick, and place the bottle on a high shelf above the source of smell. Air-wick starts to evaporate and smells vanish. It's the wick that does the trick.

JOHN CLARKE'S CASEBOOK

Good-bye, Good-bye

THE couple clasped each other in a long, tender farewell on Platform 10 at Waterloo; a girl in a scarlet swaggar coat and a young man in grey-green flannels. So it must always be, I thought, men must be off upon such enterprises, and girls must say good-bye.

The train at Platform 10 was carrying migrants on the first leg of a journey to Australia. The platform was carpeted with cigarette butts, for farewells turn all comers into chain-smokers. The platform was piled with three cases, pushchairs, pedal-cycles, carry-cots, concertinas, homely luggage people had always lived with, and it was full of family parties saying good-bye and plenty of women were crying.

The boy and the girl saw nothing of all this. They saw only each other. Then, urgently, whistles blew men waved and the migrant train began to move. I watched for the man to jump into it; but he didn't. The girl did.

WHEN I thought she had had time to get back her breath (as the train passed through Woking) I talked to her. She was pretty, fair-haired, 21 years old, and named Joyce. And she was very tired, because she had spent the night travelling to London from her home near Wolverhampton. She had been a shopgirl in Brisbane, now she was on her way to be a shopgirl in Australia.

The pay was not the lure. In Australia, she had been advised, it would be £10s. to £7 a week, not much more than she had been earning. "But I've always wanted to travel, and on a shopgirl's pay you can't."

She had paid £10 for her passage to Australia and £22 landing fee. She had £30 in traveller's cheques as working capital at the other end. Out of her savings she had spent nearly £100 on clothes, having heard they were more expensive in Australia. She never had possessed such a wardrobe, as was now contained in her 100lb. maximum luggage allowance.

What about the boy Joyce had left behind? He hoped to follow.

THE train was bound for Southampton and the liner Asturias, which would carry 1,161 migrants to Australia—the latest of 300,000 to sail since 1947.

At Southampton the train drew alongside the handsome, yellow-funnelled ship, and white-coated stewards hurried forward to help the harassed families.

Formalities were brief. Within an hour of the train's arrival, most of its passengers were lunching on board. The menu was polenta, brussels beef, a la mode, semolina custard pudding, coffee. For dinner that night, Chief Steward Henry Becher (from Wolverhampton, like Joyce) had arranged a meal that included turkey and roast lamb.

WHERE was Joyce? I roamed through the public rooms, all nicely furnished still, for though cabins on this migrant ship were stripped to hold two, four, six and eight in bunks, the rest of the ship still had liner-luxury—except that the bare (bottled beer 10d, whisky 10d, cigarettes 2s. 6d. for 50) would close at tea each night.

On the trip, in the public rooms, two Australian women, Noreen Lee, of Perth, and Kay Dee, of Melbourne, would, after allowing migrants three days to settle down, give lectures on life in the various Australian States, on social services, housing, women's problems in Australia.

I walked the broad promenade-decks, where children were already rehearsing tricks that made you look around for a lifebelt. I noticed many passengers were a plumed badge and asked one about it. "Future Emigrants to Australia Society of Manchester," he said. "We pay 2s. 6d. to join, then 6d. a week. We've £120 in the bank to help migrants who may fall on bad times."

BUT where was Joyce? I left the ship, and in the customs shed on shore I found her. She was in the arms of her young man. He had caught a following train down to Southampton, and the long,

Len Hutton's Day At Lord's: Test Captain's Scintillating Innings

With a true captain's innings of 150, Len Hutton, England's first professional skipper, saw his side into a strong position on the second day of the second Test at Lord's today against India.

With three days left, England now lead by 57 runs with five of their first innings wickets still standing in reply to India's total of 235.

It was certainly Hutton's day today. It was his first century against India and the 108th of his career and only the second century, hit by an England captain since the war.

The other England captain's century was that of F. G. Mann when he scored 136 not out against South Africa at Port Elizabeth in the final Test in 1949.

In the morning England concentrated to such an extent on wearing down the Indian bowling that Hutton and Simpson only scored 60 runs in the two hours before lunch.

Subsequently, Hutton achieved his most scintillating form and in the next two hours before tea 127 were put on the board.

Simpson played a valuable part in the stand until the score was 100 and then a brilliant partnership between Hutton and May ensued. These two added 158 in just under two and a half hours—a record England second wicket stand against India.

When Hutton left England failed to drive home their advantage during the last hour when only 28 runs were made for the loss of Compton, May and Watkins.

GALLANT FIGHT

These late successes put India back into the game with a fighting chance.

The Indians fought back gallantly at the end of a grueling day and they owed much to the steady bowling of Mankad and Hazare, coupled with smart wicket-keeping by Mantri who caught both Hutton and May.

So England, after being 284 for one at 5.30 p.m., finished the day with a score of 292 for five.

The attendance was 27,000—slightly larger than yesterday.

The Indians' keen bowling today deserved better success, but they were denied it through faulty fielding which fell below

Living Language

Why we say Suburban.

The rule for cities in olden days was that they should be built on a hill within a defensive wall, and this applied to early Rome itself. The Latin "urbs" means city and "sub" means under, so that "suburban" buildings were those built under the city, or outside the walls lower down the hill.

Rose Upsets Rankings

London, June 20.

Mervyn Rose, Australian left-hander, upset the Australian rankings to reach the men's Singles final in the London Lawn Tennis Championships at Queen's Club today.

Rose, ranked No. 3, won in straight sets over his country's national champion, Ken McGregor, by 6-4, 6-4.

Frank Sedgman of Australia beat Dorfman of the United States 6-1, 6-2 in this other semi-final.

In the women's singles semi-finals, Mrs. H. Redick-Smith of South Africa beat Miss H. Fletcher of Britain 7-5, 6-4. Miss E. M. Wilford of Britain beat Miss J. Trower of Britain 6-3, 6-1.—Reuters.

Lenso, tender good-byes had begun all over again. He had quite a knack of turning up at the right time, the right place. It would not surprise me if he were awaiting Joyce when she arrived in the customs shed at Brisbane. Then what long, tense, tender greetings there would be.

the high standard set at Leeds in the first Test.

Simpson could have been stumped when he had scored only 10 and May was badly missed from a skier early in his innings.

Later, when Hutton and May were chasing runs, there were hot chances which were not accepted.

Such chances often make the difference between defeat and victory in Tests.

Mankad, with his left-arm spinners, bowled to a packed off-side field, and his accuracy, coupled with a similar high standard of accurate bowling by Ghulam Ahmed, often had the England batsmen subdued—Hutton included.

COUNTY MATCHES

London, June 20.

Yorkshire were the only team among the leading six in the County Championship table to improve their position as a result of matches ending today.

With the leader, Surrey and Middlesex, playing non-championship matches against the Universities, Yorkshire, by a fine innings, won over Worcestershire, moved up into third place, equal with Lancashire, who were saved by rain from what might well have been their first defeat of the season.

At the other end of the table, last year's champions, Warwickshire, had their first win of the season, beating Sussex and moving up from 16th to 11th position.

Surrey still lead the table with 92 points from 10 matches. They are followed by Middlesex with 84 (10 matches), Lancashire 68 (9), Yorkshire 68 (10), Northamptonshire 64 (11) and Derbyshire 50 (11).

INTELLIGENCE TEST SOLUTION

If there were m trains originally, and it was proposed to put n men in each, we have:

$$(m - 1) \times 10 = (m - 3) \times (n + 232)$$

$$10m - 10 = mn - 3n + 2716$$

There are 10000 men in all. London Express Special.
